

Chinese Planes Hold Dog Fight

Taipei, Formosa—(UPI)—The Chinese Nationalist air force announced that more than 10 Red Chinese MIG17 jet fighters intercepted two Nationalist Sabre jets off the Fukien coast today.

The Nationalist and Communist planes engaged in a dog fight for seven minutes, the communique said, but no damage was reported to either side.

Earlier, Defense Minister Yu Ta-wei said that Communist seizure of the Quemoy and Matsu outposts would involve the United States in the Red war of nerves against Nationalist China.

In an exclusive interview, Yu said that loss of the Quemoy and the Matsus would move the Nationalist defense line back to the Pescadores, which the U.S. has promised to protect.

The U.S.-educated defense minister said the Communists are already developing a pattern of pressure against the outposts just like the one they used to drive the Nationalists out of the Tachen Islands three years ago.

This time, Yu said, there is one difference — Nationalist China is determined to fight if necessary to hold on to its last outposts instead of pulling out as it did from the Tachens.

Bill Bans Interstate Shipment of Knives

Washington — (UPI) — President Eisenhower signed into law Tuesday a bill banning interstate shipment of switchblade knives.

Congressional sponsors said the measure was aimed at cutting juvenile delinquency by curbing traffic in a common gang weapon.

The law provides a penalty of up to $2,000 in fines and five years in prison for violations.

President Proposes Monitoring Radio Broadcasts in Mideast

As a means of preventing outside sources from stirring up strife from within, the President proposed U.N. monitoring of radio broadcasts "directed across national frontiers in the troubled Near East area."

Use of War Scores
The President said carrying out of his peace plan could mean "in a few short years" that the Lebanon and Jordan crises would mark "the beginning of a great new era of Arab history."

Referring to Russia's "baldistic blackmail," the President demanded: "Should it not be serious national misconduct to manufacture a general war scare in an effort to achieve local political aims?"

Such pressures will never be used successfully against the United States, he said. But he said he'd asked to address the General Assembly for the second time because such pressures created "dangers which affect every one of us."

The Lebanon and Jordan

crises "clearly demonstrated" the urgent need for setting up a standby U.N. military force, the President said.

Prompt Action
Mideast nations should be able to get "prompt and effective action" by the U.N. when endangered by "armed pressure and infiltration coming across their borders," he said. This required a U.N. military force to make the world organization's "presence manifest in the area of trouble."

"Therefore I believe this assembly should take action looking toward the creation of a standby U.N. peace force," Eisenhower said.

In proposing a regional Arab development program, the President broke with the U.S. tradition of offering economic aid only on a nation-to-nation basis. But he emphasized that the nation-to-nation policy would be continued except when the regional basis appeared more feasible.

Eisenhower made clear that the U.S. would not take the leadership in the Arab economic program. He said this nation would support it if the Arab states agreed on it and were "prepared to support it with their own resources." But "leadership must belong to the Arab states themselves," he said.

Aid To Arab States
He proposed that UN Secretary-general Dag Hammarskjöld start consultation immediately with Arab nations to see if they could agree on establishing an Arab regional development institution with the job of speeding up of "progress in such fields as industry, agriculture, water supply, health and education."

He predicted such a program would attract both public and private capital from other countries.

Eisenhower flew here a few hours after the White House announced he would lead off for the U.S. in the special session's debate on the Middle East.

Eisenhower warned the Kremlin that its goal of world domination and universal Communism was "an impossible dream."

Individual Nations
"This world of individual nations is not going to be controlled by any one power or group of powers," he said. "This world is not going to be committed to anyone ideology."

He appeared to be supporting the idea of coexistence of democracy and Communism when he said: "The nature of today's weapons, the nature of modern communications and the widening circle of new nations make it plain that we must, in the end, be a world community of open societies."

Use of U. S. Troops
The President said the only purpose of sending U.S. troops into Lebanon in answer to the appeal of its president was to prevent what he called the crime of "fomenting of civil strife in the interest of a foreign power . . . or at least prevent its having fatal consequences."

He reiterated a promise that all U.S. troops would be withdrawn when it was requested by a "duly constituted government" of Lebanon or when UN or other action eliminated "the original danger."

Added emphasis was given to this promise when a U.S. Marine battalion of 1,800 men began pulling out a few hours before he spoke.

He expressed "earnest hope" that the assembly would act to "assure the continued independence and integrity" of Lebanon.

War Charges
He labeled as "upside down" Khrushchev's "war hysteria" charges that world peace had been endangered in this case where two small nations had been helped "in their desire to survive."

"If it is made an international crime to help a small nation maintain its independence, then indeed the possibilities of conquest are unlimited," Eisenhower said.

He said a common principle had guided the U.S. in "moments of clear danger" since World War II. He listed Iran, Greece and Turkey, the Berlin blockade, Korea and the Formosan Straits.

"That principle was that aggression, direct or indirect, must be checked before it gathers sufficient momentum to destroy us all — aggressor and defender alike," he said.

The President, recognizing "the great surge of Arab nationalism," said he didn't consider the status quo in the Middle East "sacrosanct." But he said changes should reflect the will of the people and "be brought about in peaceful ways."

Try and Stop Me

By BENNETT CERF

OLLIE JAMES tells of a young doctor who was having a hard time getting a foothold in the community. So he hung out a sign which proclaimed, "A No. 1 Psychiatrist." And sure enough the next morning a patient popped up. She carried in her arms a flag, a bowl of cherries, and a crate of chickens. She wore an evening gown, a miner's cap, and baseball shoes, and had a pair of skis strapped to her back.

"I see you have a problem," ventured the doctor. "You bet I have," she agreed. "It's my brother." "First," suggested the doctor, "I want to see how much help I can count on from you. Suppose you strap on those skis and do a slalom from yonder filing cabinet to the top of your crate of chickens." The visitor did as directed, the crate splintered when she landed on it and the room was showered with chickens, cherries, and what-nots. She fainted dead away.

When she came to, the doctor inquired formally, "How long, madam, have you been subject to these fainting spells?"

California May Start Rebuttal

San Francisco — (UPI) — California may begin its rebuttal case today in the Colorado river water suit.

But first, Special Master Simon H. Rifkind had to hear further testimony about disputed land in the Fort Mohave Indian Reservation, and the rebuttal cases of Nevada, New Mexico and Utah.

Indications were that none of these would take too much time. If so, California would get its case under way late today.

When the trial adjourned Tuesday, the government introduced evidence to claim 2,000 disputed acres which it said form a part of the Fort Mohave Reservation.

Earlier, California introduced evidence to support its claim to 7,785 acres of land which the U.S. government said belongs to the Colorado River Indian Reservation.

The question is important because the government's claims to Colorado river water are based on its total acreage.

Jerome Muys, a California attorney, introduced maps and letters showing that various U.S. agencies have recognized through the years in many of their actions that the land is not part of the reservation.

Smith said the new building would be adequate to take care of growth over the next decade.
