

Backstairs: Ike's Farm Looks Nice

By DAYTON MOORE
United Press International
Washington—(UPI)—Backstairs at the White House:

The crops on President Eisenhower's Gettysburg, Pa., farm look fine. In fact, the corn is so tall that it interferes with newsmen covering his arrivals by helicopter. Last week, the descending whirlybird disappeared behind the waving corn and newsmen missed the actual landing.

Some newsmen moved up a dirt road to a field along a fence enclosing the President's farm house. They had a clear view of the main house and lawn, but Secret Service agents soon chased them away. Although fenced off from the President's house, the field also is his property.

The President considers the farm to be part of his personal life. Newsmen have been permitted inside the gates only on a few occasions—when the President's activities strictly are of an official nature. The visit by Viscount Montgomery, the British field marshal, is one example.

Newsmen covering the President regularly may get a compensating break in Washington, however.
