Pillow Push!

Nat Bradford

This lively game causes much laughter. Place a pillow in the center of a ring of players who, with hands joined, walk slowly around and around it. All at once one player tries to push or pull one of the players on either side of him. He tries to shove him so he will touch the pillow, and thus be out of the game. Players keep holding hands till, one after another, they touch the pillow—perhaps even landing on it! The one who never touches it wins the game.

What Do You See?

Nancy Clinton

Take a coin and examine it very closely for two minutes. Now put it out of sight and take a pencil and jot down the things you remember seeing on that coin. If you play this with others, anything forgotten must be paid for with a forfeit. Try it. It's fun!

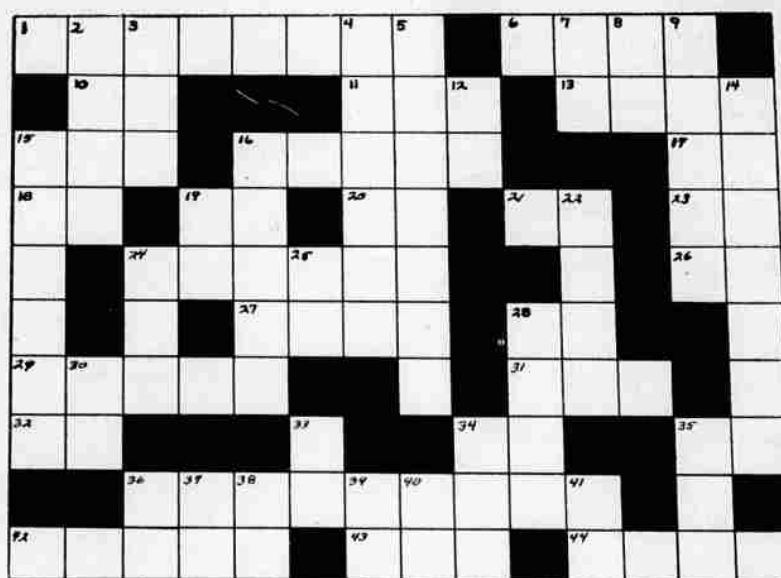

Rainy-Day Baseball

Harlon E. Hicks

Cut out 18 pieces of cardboard about the size of dominoes. With a pen or pencil, write "Base" on nine, "Run" on six, and "Out" on three.

On a piece of cardboard or paper, draw a baseball diamond, marking the bases, First, Second, Third, and Home Plate. Use a bottle cap or other small object for the runner—only one is needed for both teams. Now you are ready to play. Divide the players into two groups or teams. After deciding which team is to bat first, place the runner on Home Plate. Place the cardboard counters face down on a table, board, or other flat surface and shuffle them about. Let each member of both teams take turns selecting a counter and turning it face up. If the counter reads "Out," no matter which side draws it, the runner on base is out. If it reads "Run," one run is counted for the team at bat; if it reads "Base," the runner is moved to the next base. Any runner circling the diamond one base at a time, also counts one run. After each run, the runner must be at Home Plate before a counter is drawn.

When three outs are made by one side, the counters are shuffled again and the other team bats.
