Historic Relic on Display in Portland

Portland—(UPI)—An historic relic of Oregon's early lumbering industry today went on view in the Forestry Building musem here.

An old steam-powered log yarder, known as a "Donkey" was restored and presented to the museum by Georgia-Pacific Corporation. The machine weighs about 15 tons without its log sled and was manufactured by Willamette Iron and Steel Works in Portland.

It generated about 250 horsepower and kept a woodcutting crew busy supplying the 10 or 12 cords of wood per day it took to maintain its head of steam. It was used occasionally as recently as 1954.

Much Recruiting Gets Few Pickers For Fruit Harvest

Kinney said that only about 20 per cent of the men are capable of making a good wage picking. "Nothing is harder than harvesting pears," he stated. "Numerically," he continued, "there are enough able bodied people to get the crop in, but realistically only about 10 per cent of the transients are working to save money. The others leave here in no better condition than when they came."

James Pullman, administrator of the Jackson county public welfare commission, stated that a surprisingly low number of the transients come to the commission during the summer for assistance. "The basic problem as I see it," he said, "is what to do with the large number of inadequate workers who are around." He added that he had no definite answer to this problem.

Bruce Hitt from the county school system told commiteemen that each fall as many as 400 children of transients are enrolled in schools throughout the county. They remain into October and then move on, he noted. "There are not enough of them to cause a problem to the school system," he said.

Miss Francis Clink, a county public health nurse, said that they are preparing a health survey to be taken among migratory workers but at the present time the health situation is not known.

"Our main entry to the children of migrant workers is through the schools," she said, but went on to explain that "by the time we are ready to take action with sick children they have usually been withdrawn from the school."

Migrants Affect Hospitals

Miss B. J. Larsen, administrator at the Rogue Valley hospital, and Glenn Keyes, business manager at Sacred Heart hospital, each reported that the hospitals stand considerable expense in treating migrant families. Keyes also said that one big problem is that parents don't seem to realize the seriousness of many of the illnesses their children have and therefore the hospitals don't get the sick children until they are seriously ill.

Dave Lowry, the third member of the Fruit Growers League to report on conditions, concluded the hearing by telling the committeemen that although ideally migrant workers would become a thing of the past, the growers are forced to support the use of migrants if they are to get their crops harvested. "From personal experience I'd say that petty thievery has increased among migrants in recent years although the number of migrants in the country has decreased," he stated. And he added that the growers have practically no trouble with Mexican nationals as far as thievery goes.

Committemen present at the hearing were State Sen. Truman A. Chase, vice chairman, the Rev. Daniel B. Wessler, secretary; and Dr. Hoyt C. Franchere. Also present was Dr. Donald Balmer, research director of the committee.

Balmer said after the meeting that the hearing was extremely revealing because up until now the committee has had no report of labor shortages in the state this year which would necessitate importing Mexican nationals.

The committee will hold its next meeting in Portland on Saturday, Aug. 23.
