

Eisenhower Rules Out Any Controls to Curb Inflation

Washington — (UP) — President Eisenhower today flatly ruled out any government controls at this time to curb inflation.

The President vigorously told his news conference that labor and management prudence—and as much of a cut in government spending as possible—are still the best ways to cope with the wage-price spiral.

He said that Congress, after having been in an economy mood only a year ago, now seems to be on a spending cycle. He considers this a mistaken policy.

Vetoed Bills

It was for this reason, he said, that he vetoed several bills which he thought would involve spending too much money. As far as possible, he said the government should spend only for the items it absolutely needs today. Despite what he called his economizing efforts, the government is expected to run 12 billion dollars in the red this fiscal year.

The President was in a good mood throughout the meeting with reporters.

He began by reading a prepared statement appealing to "common sense" and "civic responsibility" in solving the school integration problem. He pledged to uphold the Constitution and battle against the "anarchy" which he said would result if the courts are defied.

Foreign Situation

On other subjects, the President:

—Repeated the administration warning that if Soviet-encouraged indirect aggression continues, the world is headed for what he called real trouble. But he said that does not mean the world would necessarily become engulfed in a big war. He said that if the Free World follows a firm, steady course he believes the Soviet will eventually find it to their own best interests to stop trying to bribe and subvert small nations and will let them find their own destinies.

—Declined to say exactly when the U.S. will withdraw the rest of its forces from Lebanon, but repeated that it would be as soon as the legal government of Lebanon requested it or the United Nations makes preparations to assure security in the area.

—Reported that the U.S. has no evidence that Red Chinese boss Mao Tse-tung is playing a major part in shaping Soviet policy.

—Repeated his proposal that the U.N. should have a police force, but said it may have to await a growth of common sense and tolerance among nations. He said he did not think that the proposal itself could be kept before the U.N. now on an urgent basis. Arab and other interests have opposed the President's proposal for such a force.

Says U.S. Is Strong

—A reported questioned the adequacy of this country's defenses. The President replied that the U.S. military posture is not only adequate but is the most powerful in the nation's history and completely capable of acting as a deterrent to war. He said that every day there are new developments—new enlargements—to make the armed forces stronger and more efficient.

—As of this moment, he has no specific plans for speaking in the forthcoming congressional campaigns although he thinks it would be unusual if he didn't have

CAA Blamed for Collision Between Airliner, AF Jet

Washington — (UP) — The Civil Aeronautics Administration has been given most of the blame for a collision between an airliner and an Air Force jet near Las Vegas, Nev., April 21 that took 49 lives.

The CAA's sister organization, the Civil Aeronautics Board, leveled the accusation Tuesday night in an accident investigation report.

Even after United Air Lines had complained of near misses in the Las Vegas vicinity, the CAA took "no action of any kind," the report said. It also said CAA Administrator James T. Pyle should have brought to the attention of the CAB the fact that the Las Vegas area had presented a potentially dangerous air traffic situation.

It said "this was not done." The CAB is an independent agency which sets the safety standards and rules under which U.S. airlines operate. The CAA, a branch of the Commerce Department, carries out the policies and rules established by the CAB.

Pilots Are Killed

Forty-nine persons, including two Air Force pilots, were killed when a United Air Lines DC7 and an F100F Super Sabre collided 21,000 feet above the desert. A student pilot in the jet was given flight training by an instructor.

The report criticized the CAA for having authorized Nellis Air Force Base, near Las Vegas, to make such training flights several times daily on a regular basis.

The Air Force was blamed for not having cut down to a minimum the chance of collision on such flights out of Nellis.

The report noted that the "jet penetration" which the Super Sabre was executing carried it into a standard federal airway used by commercial traffic.

As a result of the accident, the report said, Nellis authorities have taken measures to reduce the possibility of similar collisions in the future.

The board also concluded from reconstruction of the wreckage and eyewitness reports that the jet's instructor attempted a last second evasive maneuver. The initial contact occurred between the leading edge of the DC7 right wing and the leading edge of the F100F right wing.

Mobile Silencer Used on Jet Planes

Portland — (UP) — Residents near the airbase here will no longer have to suffer ear-shattering noise from jet plane warmups. They're putting mechanical earmuffs on the planes.

The Air Force is trying out a new mobile silencer, it was announced Tuesday by Col. Younger Pitts, commander of the 337th Fighter Group.

The sound suppressor is designed to muffle the F-102 Delta Daggers during warmup checks when the plane engines have to run at full throttle. The sound emanating from a jet while it's choked to the ground with the powerful motors running is about 115 decibels. With the mechanical muzzle, it's 78 decibels.
