Backstairs: Water Supply Concern

BY DAYTON MOORE
United Press International
Washington—UPI—Backstairs at the White House:

President Eisenhower long has been concerned with the nation's water supply. Since taking office, he frequently has referred to the importance of water to the nation and the need of taking steps to assure an adequate supply in the future.

In an informal talk early in his first administration, he said: "I have become convinced that before very long, America will almost unanimously look upon water as its single greatest resource."

It was during his first year in office that the government's program on desalting sea water and brackish water got underway. The importance he attaches to this program is shown by the fact that it is one of the few nondefense projects for which he requested an increase in funds from Congress this year.

It was the progress achieved in this program that led him to include in his speech before the special session of the United Nations General Assembly on the Middle East the statement that "new horizons are opening in the desalting of water." Some scientists have indicated they believe the President was over-optimistic when he added: "The ancient problem of water is on the threshold of the solution."

The public's great interest in the water problem is demonstrated by about 6,000 suggestions volunteered to the government by persons from all walks of life.

Eisenhower starts his weekly meetings with congressional Republican leaders at an early hour for official Washington—8:30 a.m. But two participants frequently have showed up 30 minutes or an hour early.

F. Knowland (Calif.) on several occasions has had breakfast at the White House with a member of the President's staff before the meeting began. And Sen. Everett M. Dirksen (R-Ill.), an early riser, has used the Cabinet Room for some paper work he carries in a bulging briefcase.

American Opera Gets Enthusiastic Reception

Brussels—UPI—A packed house gave an enthusiastic reception Wednesday night to Gian-Carlo Menotti's new opera "Maria Golovin," which will occupy the American theater at the World's Fair until the end of the month.

The opera, written expressly for the fair, concerns a blinded soldier who meets and falls in love with a woman—the Maria of the title—only to lose her when her husband returns from the war.

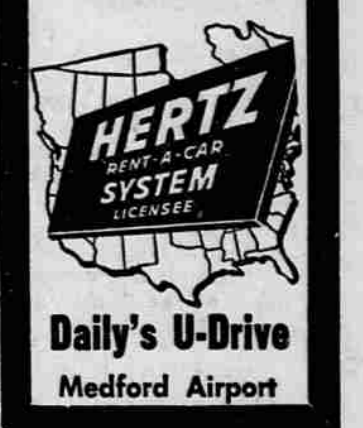

Franca Duval and Richard Cross sang the leads.

Whittaker Would Be Paged to Hear Case

Washington—UPI—Justice Charles E. Whittaker would be paged to consider any Little Rock School Board legal move through the Supreme Court to bar seven Negro students from going back to Central High school next month. But sources indicate that chances were remote the high court would intervene at this stage in the battle.

The school board has rushed an appeal for a stay of judgment to the Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals which reversed a federal court order postponing integration until 1961.

A similar petition for a stay and a review of the ruling is planned for the Supreme Court, according to a school board attorney. The clerk of the high bench then will con-
