Drive to Extend Confidence Opens By Atlanta Judge

Atlanta—(UPI)—You can't legally confide in your own doctor in 18 states. Even the secrets you reveal while lying on your psychiatrist's couch can be pried from him legally, and spread before the public if he is ever called to the witness stand. Every state protects confidences you entrust to your lawyer and gives husbands and wives the legal right to refuse to testify against each other. But only 30 states protect the confidences of doctors. Judge Luther Alverson of the Fulton County Superior Court here is campaigning to extend this protection at least to psychiatrists and social workers in the other states. Judge Alverson told a recent meeting of the Family Service society in Atlanta that only one state, Kentucky, has a law protecting all types of psychotherapists. Georgia, he said, for example, protects only psychologists. Expected of Them "Most patients that undergo psychotherapy know what he is expected of them—so he lays bare his entire self, his dreams, fantasies, sins and shame," Alverson said. "It would be too much to expect them to do so if they knew that all they say, and all that the psychiatrist learns from what they say, may be revealed to the whole world from a witness chair." Alverson said he agrees with the majority legal opinion of the 18 states that no special protection is needed for ordinary doctor-patient relationships. "However," he said, "my contention is that there is a distinction between psychiatrists and practitioners in other fields of medicine. The peculiarly close relationship of trust and confidence required between psychiatrist and patient makes the situation a special one."

Teamsters Meet To Map Strategy

Stockton, Calif.—(UPI)—Teamster secretaries of Sacramento Joint Council 38 met today to map their next moves in the 14-day old western trucking strike lockout. The Sacramento council touched off the lockout when it called 2,350 members out on strike in Central California and Western Nevada to support demands for wage parity with drivers in the San Francisco Bay Area. The union has since claimed that agreements already signed leave only 1,400 men on strike. After the Sacramento council members struck, employer associations in 11 western states ordered a lockout, asserting that a strike against one is a strike against all. Non-striking long haul drivers out of work because of the lockout began today to draw California unemployment insurance benefits.

Science Program Starts in Grades

Quincy, Calif.—(UPI)—A science program that starts simply in kindergarten and continues with increasing complexity through the six elementary grades is preparing students of Plumas County schools for advanced work in chemistry, physics and other natural sciences. Lester Nichols, assistant superintendent of schools, explained: "We are not trying to make nuclear physicists in the first six grades, but we are convinced the groundwork can be laid early for an understanding of the basic physical laws and forces as preparation for more intensive study in high school and college." The county's forward-looking program has been set forth in a printed guide developed by more than 70 teachers four years ago and recently revised in a second edition. The study guide is not only popular in Plumas schools, but in districts throughout the state. Requests have been received from as far away as Japan. Nichols said extra copies have been printed for any further outside requests.

Room Can Be Aired, Soundproofed Now

Chicago—(UPI)—Researchers revealed they found a way to air and soundproof a room in one operation. The quiet-and-ventilation principle was created at Illinois Institute of Technology by forcing air through the holes in regulation acoustical ceiling. The flow of air actually enhances the soundproofing by creating resistance to noise and absorbing it. A project set up at IIT's Armour Research foundation to study the acoustical resistance from the airflow stems from the conversion of acoustical energy to thermal energy at the ends of the holes in the ceiling. The research men said the principle could be applied in offices and factories to provide a more economical method of combining ventilation and sound control.

MONARCH BUTTERFLY
The lovely monarch butterfly, soon to flutter southward in its fall migration, has another name—the Milkweed Butterfly. He has the second one because the milkweed is the one plant on which he feasts and lays his eggs. Nonetheless, monarch more suitably describes him because, despite his conspicuous beauty and slow fluttering flight that makes him an easy prey to fast-flying birds, he has a built-in weapon of defense that is very near to being total. Thanks to it, he is able to go almost anywhere and in relative security. Offensive Odor His defense is an odor so offensive that when a cloud of monarchs settle on a bush, as you may see them do this fall, the birds will leave them strictly alone. This odor, however, has not benefited only the monarchs.

Lebanese Sniper Wounds American

Beirut, Lebanon—(UPI)—A rebel sniper wounded an American soldier strolling in Beirut's "Liberty area" and three Navy men were seized and questioned for more than five hours in a luxurious rebel hideout, military authorities here disclosed. Lebanese government officials indicated that these incidents and the serious wounding of a French official as he drove through the city might bring a massive security crackdown and possibly even a state of emergency. The three Navy men were released unharmed.

GOOD THING HE DIDN'T

Myrtle Beach, S.C.—(UPI)—An unidentified swimmer at Myrtle Beach Sunday didn't really need rescuing, thank you. The fire chief sent a life guard in a boat out after the swimmer when it was believed the man was too far out. The boat sank and the man and the life guard leisurely swam ashore together.

Western Big Three Seek Summit Anew

London—(UPI)—The Western Big Three have moved to revive the deadlocked negotiations for a possible East-West summit conference. The move came as the Soviet Union attacked the British-American decision to continue nuclear weapons tests until Oct. 31 when their conditional offer goes into effect. The United States, Britain and France delivered identical notes to the Soviet foreign office Friday afternoon expressing hope that preliminary summit preparation talks could be resumed, a step that might lead eventually to general nuclear disarmament. The first paper in the U. S. was built on the Neponset River at Milton, Mass., in 1929.
