National Guard Ends First Month of New Training Program

By CAPT. S. J. FAGONE
Oregon National Guard troops completed their first month of the new training phase with high morale and a better understanding of their individual duties and positions. The program is being closely watched by higher headquarters.

In order for a unit to be kept at the high degree of training required by the department of defense, Oregon National Guard has been ordered to drill for eight hours on Sunday.

Members of the Medford and other units of the 186th Infantry division have completed the required basic, individual and advanced training. The next phase of training includes unit basic, with platoons and sections training together. During the past two training periods the cooks have prepared dinner for the unit.

Start Training
The communication platoon is starting its training in CPX (Command Post Exercise), in which wire circuits and radio nets are completed from the companies to a message center.

The pioneer and ammo platoon has constructed a road block, laid a mine field, and operated an ammo depot. The motor section has been discharging vehicles and performing first and second echelon maintenance on the vehicles.

The supply section has been keeping up records and maintenance on organizational equipment and the operation section has been making up lesson plans, training schedules for next quarter, and keeping up training charts and records.

The men move out at 7:30 a.m. and return to the armory at 4:30 p.m. The last hour of training is spent in cleaning up and maintaining equipment. During recall the men are permitted to participate in various athletic activities, and all the men are permitted to attend the church of their choice.

Friends, families and the general public are permitted to observe the training after they check with the guard at the entrance to the training area.

The cooks and mechanics of the rattle-snake may be heard up to 100 feet away.

EXPLAINING after 25 years, Helen Willis Roark says back injury caused her to abruptly quit tennis match she was playing against Helen Jacobs. Mrs. Roark lives in Los Angeles.

COMES IN HANDY
Richmond, Va. — Superintendent of State Police Charles W. Woodson revealed Tuesday he has added to a 16 week training program for prospective state troopers a course in baby delivery.
