

Recent Surveys Indicate That Mixed Marriages Are Unstable

By LOUIS CASSELS
United Press International
When a Protestant boy falls in love with a Catholic girl, neither of them likes to be told an interfaith marriage is a perilous undertaking.

But that's precisely the advice they'd probably get if he consulted his pastor and she consulted her priest.

"Mixed marriages" are increasingly common in this country where Protestant and Catholic children grow up in the same neighborhoods, participate in the same community events, and often attend the same schools or colleges.

According to the official Catholic Directory, one-fourth of all marriages in Catholic churches involve "mixed" couples. The figure does not include the large number of Catholics who marry non-Catholics in civil or Protestant ceremonies.

Some inter-faith marriages work out fine. But clergy members of both faiths say a difference of religion often becomes a serious source of tension. This assertion is supported by at least three separate surveys—in Michigan,

Maryland and Washington state—which show divorce and separation rates run about three times higher in mixed marriages than in those where husband and wife are of the same faith.

Pastors and priests also are troubled by evidence many "mixed" couples solve their problem by turning away from religion altogether.

A Catholic bishops' committee conducted a 10-year survey of this problem. It concluded about 30 per cent of Catholics who marry non-Catholics are "lost to the faith."

A Methodist sociologist, Prof. Murry H. Leiffer of Garrett Biblical Institute, interviewed more than 400 couples who had married across religious lines. He found one-fourth of them no longer maintained even a nominal church connection, while another fourth had not attended church in more than a year.

This tendency to sweep the "sore subject" under the rug also is reflected in the children. A YMCA study revealed that in families where both parents were Catholics, 92 per cent of their sons also were practicing Catholics. Where both parents were Protestants, 68 per cent of their sons were practicing Protestants. But in "mixed" families, only 34 per cent of the sons were practicing members of either faith.

The spiritual perils of a mixed marriage are officially recognized by the Catholic church. Its Canon 1060 forbids a Catholic to enter into a mixed marriage without special dispensation. This is granted only in cases where the non-Catholic partner to the marriage signs a pre-nuptial contract guaranteeing the faith of the Catholic partner will not be "perverted" and all children born to the couple will be "baptized and brought up in the Catholic faith."

Canon 1060 has provoked widespread resentment among Protestants. Its existence is often cited by Protestant clergymen as a main reason for their opposition to mixed marriages.

The Episcopal church has issued a pamphlet warning its young members they will deny the validity of their own faith if they sign a pre-marital agreement in which they surrender any voice in the upbringing of their children.

The most recent Protestant reply was made in West Germany where there is a growing number of inter-faith marriages. The West German Conference of Lutheran Bishops objected sharply to what it called Catholic "pressure" on Protestant partners to solve the problem.

The bishops' statement concluded with a plea to Lutherans to "remain loyal" to their own church and to "insist" their children be brought up as Protestants.

Take a close look at a church hymnal some day and you'll see why music is called "the universal language."

There is no denominational gulf so wide that it can't be bridged by a good hymn. The fact that Christians are more united when they sing than at any other time is demonstrated by a new hymnal recently adopted by eight major Lutheran bodies associated in the National Lutheran Council.

Martin Luther is represented by seven hymns, including "A Mighty Fortress Is Our God." But Luther is a minor contributor compared to Methodist Charles Wesley, who has 17 hymns in the collection. A Catholic whose work appears in the new Lutheran hymnal, as well as in many other Protestant hymnals, is John Henry Newman, who left the Church of England and became a Cardinal of the Roman Church. His best-known hymn is "Lead, Kindly Light."

The interdenominational traffic in sacred music moves both ways. Most Catholic hymnals of recent years have relied heavily on music composed by Johann Sebastian Bach, a dedicated Lutheran.

There are scores of hymns, found in both Catholic and Protestant hymnals, which date from the era when the Christian church was undivided. This common heritage includes the numerous psalms that have been set to music, and the ancient "plainsong" melodies that may have been derived from Hebrew temple chants. A familiar example of the latter is "Come, O Come, Emmanuel."

Perhaps the most "nonpartisan" category of hymns are those associated with Christmas. It would not be the least bit unusual, for example, for a program of Christmas carols to include the Catholic "O Come, All Ye Faithful," the Unitarian, "It Came Upon a Midnight Clear," the Episcopal "O Little Town of Bethlehem," the Congregational "Joy To The World," and the Methodist "Hark the Herald Angels Sing."

Hymn Writers Ignored
One reason why hymns pass so readily over denominational barriers is that people tend to pay very little attention to the names of their composers and authors.

Few regular church-goers, for example, could identify Isaac Watts. Yet many of the 600 hymns that Watts wrote in the 18th century are still being sung. And some of them, like "O God, Our Help in Ages Past," are among the most beloved in the English language.

Such is the anonymity of hymn-writers that some of the very best are remembered solely for their accomplishments in other fields. Every school child knows that John Greenleaf Whittier was a great American poet. But how many know that the gentle

Nazarenes To Bid Guest Pastor Farewell; To Have Guest Speaker Sunday

The Rev. Walter C. Morris, who for the past three months has been preaching at the First Church of the Nazarenes here, will deliver his last sermon at the local church Sunday. Mr. Morris has been substituting in the absence of the regular pastor, the Rev. R. W. Hurn. Mr. and Mrs. Morris make their home at Oceanlake.

Mr. Hurn is currently dean of the Oregon Pacific Youth camp at White Branch. Young people from Medford attending the camp include Leah Weaver and Mary Stehl. They will return to Medford with the pastor tomorrow.

The "Gospel Hour," a fifteen minute broadcast of sermons and gospel songs on radio station KMED, presented by the First Church of the Nazarene, will be discontinued after Sunday, Aug. 31.

Displaying a native blougen with poison darts, along with other Indian ornaments from Peru, the Rev. Clyde Gallier, missionary, will show pictures of jungle life in the upper regions of the Amazon, at the First Church of the Nazarene during the Sunday evening service.

The Rev. Gallier has spent seven years as a missionary in Peru, this being his first furlough and deputation tour since 1952. Prior to his work as a missionary, he spent several years in the navy during World War II. He has evangelized in and around Piura and Chota, Peru. The past week the Rev. Gallier has been the chapel speaker at the Oregon Pacific Youth camp at White Branch.

With his wife and three girls, the Rev. Gallier makes his state side home in Upland, Calif.

Central Point—Members of the Community Bible church, Central Point, will hear Miss Geraldine Peterson and Mrs. Nancy Tang, members of the staff of TEAM Formosa radio, Sunday during the 11 a.m. service.

The organization of the women represent produces more than 120 radio releases weekly, which are broadcast over 11 stations on Formosa, over the Voice of Free China to the Chinese mainland, and over stations in Korea and Manila.

The speakers will show colored pictures during the talk also, according to the Rev. Paul O. Kroon, pastor.

Subject of the weekly Watchtower study is "The Supreme Will to Be Done" for Jehovah's Witnesses. Sunday evening a tape recording entitled "Stay by These Things" will be played. This is a recording of one of the Bible talks given by the president of the Watchtower society at the recent Divine Will International assembly in New York. "This Means Everlasting Life" is currently being studied at the Tuesday evening study meetings.

Quaker wrote "Dear Lord and Father of Mankind" and dozens of other beautiful hymns?

Rarer still is the person who can identify the author of the famous recessional, "God of Our Fathers."

Don't peek at the hymnal. It was Rudyard Kipling.

Meetings Slated for First Christians; Sermon Announced

"Laymen—Each Called to be God's Man" will be the sermon topic of John Harr, guest speaker at the First Christian church Sunday morning, and Warren Fairbanks will sing a solo. This will be the last Sunday that Fairbanks will be in Medford. He is returning to Tennessee to resume a professorship at Michigan college. He has been the choir director at the First Christian church for the past year and a half.

Miss Marilyn Jo Conner will lead the Sunday evening study for the Christian Youth Fellowship entitled, "The Challenge We Face." John Alan sky will bring the worship program.

The Christian Women's fellowship are having their first monthly meeting on Wednesday beginning with the business meeting at 10:45 a.m.,

Friends Church Lists Sunday Sermon Topic

Theme for pastor Clayton Crisman's Labor Day message Sunday at the Friends Church for the 9:45 and 11 a.m. worship hours will be "He Could Do There No Mighty Works."

At the 8 p.m. worship hour Assistant Pastor Robert Smith will bring a farewell message. He and his family are moving this week to Jennings Lodge, Ore., where he will enroll at Western Evangelical seminary. Mr. Smith will also speak to the Junior Christian Endeavor group at 7 p.m. Intermediate and Senior C.E. will meet at the same time, with youth leaders.

continuing with a luncheon at 12 p.m. and ending with devotions and program starting at 1:30 p.m.

"The Christian Youth fellowship party will be at the home of Lynn and Julie Latham, 815 Park. It will be a hamburger fry with games to follow.
