

Local and Personal

At Institute—Sam Zier, representative of the Medford Osteopathic hospital, is in Portland attending a two-day meeting of the American Osteopathic Hospital association Northwest Institute, Sept. 11 and 12.

Lightning Fire—Crewmen of the state department of forestry were checking today on a lightning fire spotted yesterday near Buck Point south-east of Butte Falls. Patrolmen also were called out on a small debris fire near Hugo in Josephine county.

In Hospital—Mrs. Bessie Lumsden, 93, Plaza apartments, a resident of Medford since 1888, has been in the Rogue Valley hospital since Sunday, friends reported today. They said she sustained a back injury, but is progressing well.

Hay Stacks Burn—Two small hay stacks and two acres of grass burned late yesterday morning on Griffin Creek rd., city firemen reported. They said that flames from a trash fire of the previous day were whipped up by high wind. Mike Ober was listed as resident on the property at route 4, box 3600, which is owned by a Mr. Greenwald of Portland.

Recovering—Mrs. Joseph (Opel) Pruitt, 721 Broad st., is recovering at her home from a triple break of her ankle suffered in a fall Aug. 24, according to her husband. The patient broke her ankle while fishing on the North Fork of the Little Butte creek and had to be carried a half mile to the car by Pruitt. Doctors report that Mrs. Pruitt will remain in a cast for another six weeks.

Births

GRAVES—To Mr. and Mrs. Tommy, 1902 Elm st., Medford, Sept. 11, 1958, a girl, 8½ pounds, at Osteopathic hospital.

PENLAND—To Mr. and Mrs. Ivan L., route 3, box 71, Medford, Sept. 10, 1958, a boy, 8½ pounds, at Sacred Heart hospital.

ALLEN—To Mr. and Mrs. Jackie, 2570 Highway 99 south, Ashland, Sept. 10, 1958, a girl, 9½ pounds, at Rogue Valley hospital.

WALLACE—To Mr. and Mrs. Milton, box 52, Phoenix, Sept. 11, 1958, a girl, 9 pounds, at Rogue Valley hospital.

Flames Threaten Elgin Industry

Elgin, Ore.—Fire fighters from widespread areas of Eastern Oregon converged on the town of Elgin Wednesday in answer to the plea for aid to help control a fire that threatened to destroy the town's chief industry.

The blaze, of undetermined origin, broke out in the log deck of the Western Stud Mill Wednesday afternoon and went out of control.

Flames jumped a road and cracked to within a few feet of the home of John Kroghans before being beaten back by a small army of firefighters including many women and children.

Firemen from Elgin, La Grande, Wallawa and men and equipment from the State Department of Forestry moved in to fight the fire which had turned the extensive log decks into an inferno.

Early Wednesday night the fire was contained, but all equipment continued to pour water onto the smoldering logs throughout the night.

A converted B-25 bomber, used throughout the area on range fires with much success, made three passes over the fire, dropping some 6,000 gallons of borate slurry on the flames.

The mill, managed by Howard Crippen, employs some 270 persons, and is the town's major industry.

Cited—Jack Herbert McCandless, 21, of 27 Ashland ave., was cited yesterday for following too close after the vehicle he was driving struck DeLorme, 19, of 1800 Stratford ave., at the intersection of Lozier lane and Sunset st., state police reported.

ROY ASHPOLE Services Scheduled

Funeral Services For Roy Ashpole Set for Friday

Funeral services for Roy Ashpole, 71, prominent Eagle Point resident who died Tuesday, will be held at Conger-Morris Funeral home at 2:30 p.m. Friday. The Rev. Joseph Munshaw of the Eagle Point Community Bible church will officiate.

The Medford Elks club will be in charge of committal services at Jacksonville cemetery.

Mr. Ashpole was born Sept. 9, 1887, near Eagle Point, a son of the late John and Adeline Ashpole, early pioneers who came to the valley in 1876 from Illinois by covered wagon. Mr. Ashpole was in the stock business for several years until an injury forced his retirement.

He owned and operated the Eagle Point Hardware from its founding in 1912 until it was sold last year. He was a member of the Elks club for 48 years, and for 27 years was a member of the Eagle Point Grange. He served on the Eagle Point city council for more than 20 years.

He was married Nov. 6, 1912, in Medford, to Donna Rader, who survives. Other survivors include a son, Don Ashpole of Eagle Point.

Honorary pallbearers will include Clarence J. Greb, Lyle Vanscoy, Leonard Bradshaw, V. D. Brophy, Fred Luy, Robert LaRocque, Arthur Beas, Donald McGovern, Roy Swan, Jim West and Earl Richardson. Active pallbearers will include B. J. Dodenhoff, Roland Jenks, Jess McGadden, Harold Ottosen, Rudy Weidman and Orville Henderson.

Funeral services for Mrs. Mary Flanery, 40, of 2185 Crestbrook rd., Medford, who died in a local hospital Tuesday, will be held in Sacred Heart Catholic church at 10 a.m. Friday. Recitation of the Holy Rosary will be held at the Perl Funeral home at 7 p.m. today with the Rev. John Ilg officiating.

Interment will be in Holy Cross Catholic cemetery in Ashland, Wash., next Monday.

Mrs. Flanery was born in Spokane, Wash., May 5, 1918, and had been a resident of this community for the past six years.

Survivors include her husband, Robert C. Flanery, Medford; one daughter, Patricia, at home; her parents, M. and M. Emil Costanzo, Spokane, Wash.; four brothers, Phil, Angelo and Tony Costanzo, all of Spokane, and Or Costanzo, Tampa, Fla.; three sisters, Mrs. Rose Murda, Spokane, Mrs. Eleanor Bland, Spokane, and Mrs. Ann Talarico of Spokane, and several nieces and nephews.

Funeral services for Mrs. Mary Flanery, 40, of 2185 Crestbrook rd., Medford, who died in a local hospital Tuesday, will be held in Sacred Heart Catholic church at 10 a.m. Friday. Recitation of the Holy Rosary will be held at the Perl Funeral home at 7 p.m. today with the Rev. John Ilg officiating.

Interment will be in Holy Cross Catholic cemetery in Ashland, Wash., next Monday.

Mrs. Flanery was born in Spokane, Wash., May 5, 1918, and had been a resident of this community for the past six years.

Survivors include her husband, Robert C. Flanery, Medford; one daughter, Patricia, at home; her parents, M. and M. Emil Costanzo, Spokane, Wash.; four brothers, Phil, Angelo and Tony Costanzo, all of Spokane, and Or Costanzo, Tampa, Fla.; three sisters, Mrs. Rose Murda, Spokane, Mrs. Eleanor Bland, Spokane, and Mrs. Ann Talarico of Spokane, and several nieces and nephews.

Funeral services for Mrs. Mary Flanery, 40, of 2185 Crestbrook rd., Medford, who died in a local hospital Tuesday, will be held in Sacred Heart Catholic church at 10 a.m. Friday. Recitation of the Holy Rosary will be held at the Perl Funeral home at 7 p.m. today with the Rev. John Ilg officiating.

Interment will be in Holy Cross Catholic cemetery in Ashland, Wash., next Monday.

Mrs. Flanery was born in Spokane, Wash., May 5, 1918, and had been a resident of this community for the past six years.

Survivors include her husband, Robert C. Flanery, Medford; one daughter, Patricia, at home; her parents, M. and M. Emil Costanzo, Spokane, Wash.; four brothers, Phil, Angelo and Tony Costanzo, all of Spokane, and Or Costanzo, Tampa, Fla.; three sisters, Mrs. Rose Murda, Spokane, Mrs. Eleanor Bland, Spokane, and Mrs. Ann Talarico of Spokane, and several nieces and nephews.

Sherman Adams Storm Becoming Increasingly Difficult To Weather

Washington—(UPI)—A White House source conceded today the storm over Sherman Adams within the Republican Party was becoming increasingly difficult to weather.

When and whether Adams goes through the formality of resigning as the top assistant to President Eisenhower, this source said, depends on Adams' determination of his own political liability.

An increasing number of Republicans running for office this fall want Adams out of the White House because of his relations with Bernard Goldfine, the Boston textile magnate facing federal prosecution for contempt of Congress.

Alarmed over the Democratic sweep in the Maine elections this week and attributing part of the GOP defeat to the Adams-Goldfine affair, top Republicans in New York State joined the verbal assault on the man widely regarded as the second most powerful figure in the executive branch of government.

Adams was aware of the new demands that he get out. But he kept his own counsel so closely that Press Secretary James C. Hagerty said he knew of no contemplated changes in Adams' status. Hagerty said no resignation in any form had been submitted.

United Press International sent a reporter on a 170-mile journey through the woods of New Brunswick, Canada, Wednesday night to find Adams at the Rensselaer Miramichi Fishing club near the town of Newcastle. Adams was expected by the White House to remain there possibly through next week.

Nothing to say. Adams, according to the reporter, was "very formal." Questioned about reports of his departure from the White House, Adams said simply that he had nothing to say.

Although there was a known reluctance on the part of the President's associates to bring up with him the question of Adams' leaving unless Eisenhower first raises the matter, some of these same associates believed Adams had

nothing to say. Adams, according to the reporter, was "very formal." Questioned about reports of his departure from the White House, Adams said simply that he had nothing to say.

Although there was a known reluctance on the part of the President's associates to bring up with him the question of Adams' leaving unless Eisenhower first raises the matter, some of these same associates believed Adams had

nothing to say. Adams, according to the reporter, was "very formal." Questioned about reports of his departure from the White House, Adams said simply that he had nothing to say.

Although there was a known reluctance on the part of the President's associates to bring up with him the question of Adams' leaving unless Eisenhower first raises the matter, some of these same associates believed Adams had

nothing to say. Adams, according to the reporter, was "very formal." Questioned about reports of his departure from the White House, Adams said simply that he had nothing to say.

Although there was a known reluctance on the part of the President's associates to bring up with him the question of Adams' leaving unless Eisenhower first raises the matter, some of these same associates believed Adams had

nothing to say. Adams, according to the reporter, was "very formal." Questioned about reports of his departure from the White House, Adams said simply that he had nothing to say.

Although there was a known reluctance on the part of the President's associates to bring up with him the question of Adams' leaving unless Eisenhower first raises the matter, some of these same associates believed Adams had

nothing to say. Adams, according to the reporter, was "very formal." Questioned about reports of his departure from the White House, Adams said simply that he had nothing to say.

Although there was a known reluctance on the part of the President's associates to bring up with him the question of Adams' leaving unless Eisenhower first raises the matter, some of these same associates believed Adams had

nothing to say. Adams, according to the reporter, was "very formal." Questioned about reports of his departure from the White House, Adams said simply that he had nothing to say.

Although there was a known reluctance on the part of the President's associates to bring up with him the question of Adams' leaving unless Eisenhower first raises the matter, some of these same associates believed Adams had

nothing to say. Adams, according to the reporter, was "very formal." Questioned about reports of his departure from the White House, Adams said simply that he had nothing to say.

Although there was a known reluctance on the part of the President's associates to bring up with him the question of Adams' leaving unless Eisenhower first raises the matter, some of these same associates believed Adams had

nothing to say. Adams, according to the reporter, was "very formal." Questioned about reports of his departure from the White House, Adams said simply that he had nothing to say.

Although there was a known reluctance on the part of the President's associates to bring up with him the question of Adams' leaving unless Eisenhower first raises the matter, some of these same associates believed Adams had

nothing to say. Adams, according to the reporter, was "very formal." Questioned about reports of his departure from the White House, Adams said simply that he had nothing to say.

Although there was a known reluctance on the part of the President's associates to bring up with him the question of Adams' leaving unless Eisenhower first raises the matter, some of these same associates believed Adams had

nothing to say. Adams, according to the reporter, was "very formal." Questioned about reports of his departure from the White House, Adams said simply that he had nothing to say.

Although there was a known reluctance on the part of the President's associates to bring up with him the question of Adams' leaving unless Eisenhower first raises the matter, some of these same associates believed Adams had

nothing to say. Adams, according to the reporter, was "very formal." Questioned about reports of his departure from the White House, Adams said simply that he had nothing to say.

Although there was a known reluctance on the part of the President's associates to bring up with him the question of Adams' leaving unless Eisenhower first raises the matter, some of these same associates believed Adams had

nothing to say. Adams, according to the reporter, was "very formal." Questioned about reports of his departure from the White House, Adams said simply that he had nothing to say.

Although there was a known reluctance on the part of the President's associates to bring up with him the question of Adams' leaving unless Eisenhower first raises the matter, some of these same associates believed Adams had

nothing to say. Adams, according to the reporter, was "very formal." Questioned about reports of his departure from the White House, Adams said simply that he had nothing to say.

Although there was a known reluctance on the part of the President's associates to bring up with him the question of Adams' leaving unless Eisenhower first raises the matter, some of these same associates believed Adams had

nothing to say. Adams, according to the reporter, was "very formal." Questioned about reports of his departure from the White House, Adams said simply that he had nothing to say.

Although there was a known reluctance on the part of the President's associates to bring up with him the question of Adams' leaving unless Eisenhower first raises the matter, some of these same associates believed Adams had

nothing to say. Adams, according to the reporter, was "very formal." Questioned about reports of his departure from the White House, Adams said simply that he had nothing to say.

Although there was a known reluctance on the part of the President's associates to bring up with him the question of Adams' leaving unless Eisenhower first raises the matter, some of these same associates believed Adams had

nothing to say. Adams, according to the reporter, was "very formal." Questioned about reports of his departure from the White House, Adams said simply that he had nothing to say.

Although there was a known reluctance on the part of the President's associates to bring up with him the question of Adams' leaving unless Eisenhower first raises the matter, some of these same associates believed Adams had

nothing to say. Adams, according to the reporter, was "very formal." Questioned about reports of his departure from the White House, Adams said simply that he had nothing to say.

Although there was a known reluctance on the part of the President's associates to bring up with him the question of Adams' leaving unless Eisenhower first raises the matter, some of these same associates believed Adams had

nothing to say. Adams, according to the reporter, was "very formal." Questioned about reports of his departure from the White House, Adams said simply that he had nothing to say.

Although there was a known reluctance on the part of the President's associates to bring up with him the question of Adams' leaving unless Eisenhower first raises the matter, some of these same associates believed Adams had

nothing to say. Adams, according to the reporter, was "very formal." Questioned about reports of his departure from the White House, Adams said simply that he had nothing to say.

Although there was a known reluctance on the part of the President's associates to bring up with him the question of Adams' leaving unless Eisenhower first raises the matter, some of these same associates believed Adams had

nothing to say. Adams, according to the reporter, was "very formal." Questioned about reports of his departure from the White House, Adams said simply that he had nothing to say.

Although there was a known reluctance on the part of the President's associates to bring up with him the question of Adams' leaving unless Eisenhower first raises the matter, some of these same associates believed Adams had

nothing to say. Adams, according to the reporter, was "very formal." Questioned about reports of his departure from the White House, Adams said simply that he had nothing to say.

Although there was a known reluctance on the part of the President's associates to bring up with him the question of Adams' leaving unless Eisenhower first raises the matter, some of these same associates believed Adams had

nothing to say. Adams, according to the reporter, was "very formal." Questioned about reports of his departure from the White House, Adams said simply that he had nothing to say.

Although there was a known reluctance on the part of the President's associates to bring up with him the question of Adams' leaving unless Eisenhower first raises the matter, some of these same associates believed Adams had

nothing to say. Adams, according to the reporter, was "very formal." Questioned about reports of his departure from the White House, Adams said simply that he had nothing to say.

Although there was a known reluctance on the part of the President's associates to bring up with him the question of Adams' leaving unless Eisenhower first raises the matter, some of these same associates believed Adams had

nothing to say. Adams, according to the reporter, was "very formal." Questioned about reports of his departure from the White House, Adams said simply that he had nothing to say.

Although there was a known reluctance on the part of the President's associates to bring up with him the question of Adams' leaving unless Eisenhower first raises the matter, some of these same associates believed Adams had

nothing to say. Adams, according to the reporter, was "very formal." Questioned about reports of his departure from the White House, Adams said simply that he had nothing to say.

Although there was a known reluctance on the part of the President's associates to bring up with him the question of Adams' leaving unless Eisenhower first raises the matter, some of these same associates believed Adams had

nothing to say. Adams, according to the reporter, was "very formal." Questioned about reports of his departure from the White House, Adams said simply that he had nothing to say.

Although there was a known reluctance on the part of the President's associates to bring up with him the question of Adams' leaving unless Eisenhower first raises the matter, some of these same associates believed Adams had

nothing to say. Adams, according to the reporter, was "very formal." Questioned about reports of his departure from the White House, Adams said simply that he had nothing to say.

Although there was a known reluctance on the part of the President's associates to bring up with him the question of Adams' leaving unless Eisenhower first raises the matter, some of these same associates believed Adams had

nothing to say. Adams, according to the reporter, was "very formal." Questioned about reports of his departure from the White House, Adams said simply that he had nothing to say.

Although there was a known reluctance on the part of the President's associates to bring up with him the question of Adams' leaving unless Eisenhower first raises the matter, some of these same associates believed Adams had

nothing to say. Adams, according to the reporter, was "very formal." Questioned about reports of his departure from the White House, Adams said simply that he had nothing to say.

Although there was a known reluctance on the part of the President's associates to bring up with him the question of Adams' leaving unless Eisenhower first raises the matter, some of these same associates believed Adams had

nothing to say. Adams, according to the reporter, was "very formal." Questioned about reports of his departure from the White House, Adams said simply that he had nothing to say.

Although there was a known reluctance on the part of the President's associates to bring up with him the question of Adams' leaving unless Eisenhower first raises the matter, some of these same associates believed Adams had

nothing to say. Adams, according to the reporter, was "very formal." Questioned about reports of his departure from the White House, Adams said simply that he had nothing to say.

Although there was a known reluctance on the part of the President's associates to bring up with him the question of Adams' leaving unless Eisenhower first raises the matter, some of these same associates believed Adams had

nothing to say. Adams, according to the reporter, was "very formal." Questioned about reports of his departure from the White House, Adams said simply that he had nothing to say.

Although there was a known reluctance on the part of the President's associates to bring up with him the question of Adams' leaving unless Eisenhower first raises the matter, some of these same associates believed Adams had

nothing to say. Adams, according to the reporter, was "very formal." Questioned about reports of his departure from the White House, Adams said simply that he had nothing to say.

Although there was a known reluctance on the part of the President's associates to bring up with him the question of Adams' leaving unless Eisenhower first raises the matter, some of these same associates believed Adams had

nothing to say. Adams, according to the reporter, was "very formal." Questioned about reports of his departure from the White House, Adams said simply that he had nothing to say.

Although there was a known reluctance on the part of the President's associates to bring up with him the question of Adams' leaving unless Eisenhower first raises the matter, some of these same associates believed Adams had

nothing to say. Adams, according to the reporter, was "very formal." Questioned about reports of his departure from the White House, Adams said simply that he had nothing to say.

Although there was a known reluctance on the part of the President's associates to bring up with him the question of Adams' leaving unless Eisenhower first raises the matter, some of these same associates believed Adams had

nothing to say. Adams, according to the reporter, was "very formal." Questioned about reports of his departure from the White House, Adams said simply that he had nothing to say.

Although there was a known reluctance on the part of the President's associates to bring up with him the question of Adams' leaving unless Eisenhower first raises the matter, some of these same associates believed Adams had

nothing to say. Adams, according to the reporter, was "very formal." Questioned about reports of his departure from the White House, Adams said simply that he had nothing to say.

Although there was a known reluctance on the part of the President's associates to bring up with him the question of Adams' leaving unless Eisenhower first raises the matter, some of these same associates believed Adams had

nothing to say. Adams, according to the reporter, was "very formal." Questioned about reports of his departure from the White House, Adams said simply that he had nothing to say.

Although there was a known reluctance on the part of the President's associates to bring up with him the question of Adams' leaving unless Eisenhower first raises the matter, some of these same associates believed Adams had

nothing to say. Adams, according to the reporter, was "very formal." Questioned about reports of his departure from the White House, Adams said simply that he had nothing to say.

Although there was a known reluctance on the part of the President's associates to bring up with him the question of Adams' leaving unless Eisenhower first raises the matter, some of these same associates believed Adams had

nothing to say. Adams, according to the reporter, was "very formal." Questioned about reports of his departure from the White House, Adams said simply that he had nothing to say.

Although there was a known reluctance on the part of the President's associates to bring up with him the question of Adams' leaving unless Eisenhower first raises the matter, some of these same associates believed Adams had

nothing to say. Adams, according to the reporter, was "very formal." Questioned about reports of his departure from the White House, Adams said simply that he had nothing to say.

Although there was a known reluctance on the part of the President's associates to bring up with him the question of Adams' leaving unless Eisenhower first raises the matter, some of these same associates believed Adams had

nothing to say. Adams, according to the reporter, was "very formal." Questioned about reports of his departure from the White House, Adams said simply that he had nothing to say.

Although there was a known reluctance on the part of the President's associates to bring up with him the question of Adams' leaving unless Eisenhower first raises the matter, some of these same associates believed Adams had

nothing to say. Adams, according to the reporter, was "very formal." Questioned about reports of his departure from the White House, Adams said simply that he had nothing to say.

Although there was a known reluctance on the part of the President's associates to bring up with him the question of Adams' leaving unless Eisenhower first raises the matter, some of these same associates believed Adams had

nothing to say. Adams, according to the reporter, was "very formal." Questioned about reports of his departure from the White House, Adams said simply that he had nothing to say.

Although there was a known reluctance on the part of the President's associates to bring up with him the question of Adams' leaving unless Eisenhower first raises the matter, some of these same associates believed Adams had

nothing to say. Adams, according to the reporter, was "very formal." Questioned about reports of his departure from the White House, Adams said simply that he had nothing to say.

Although there was a known reluctance on the part of the President's associates to bring up with him the question of Adams' leaving unless Eisenhower first raises the matter, some of these same associates believed Adams had

nothing to say. Adams, according to the reporter, was "very formal." Questioned about reports of his departure from the White House, Adams said simply that he had nothing to say.

Although there was a known reluctance on the part of the President's associates to bring up with him the question of Adams' leaving unless Eisenhower first raises the matter, some of these same associates believed Adams had

nothing to say. Adams, according to the reporter, was "very formal." Questioned about reports of his departure from the White House, Adams said simply that he had nothing to say.

Although there was a known reluctance on the part of the President's associates to bring up with him the question of Adams' leaving unless Eisenhower first raises the matter, some of these same associates believed Adams had

nothing to say. Adams, according to the reporter, was "very formal." Questioned about reports of his departure from the White House, Adams said simply that he had nothing to say.

Although there was a known reluctance on the part of the President's associates to bring up with him the question of Adams' leaving unless Eisenhower first raises the matter, some of these same associates believed Adams had

nothing to say. Adams, according to the reporter, was "very formal." Questioned about reports of his departure from the White House, Adams said simply that he had nothing to say.

Although there was a known reluctance on the part of the President's associates to bring up with him the question of Adams' leaving unless Eisenhower first raises the matter, some of these same associates believed Adams had

nothing to say. Adams, according to the reporter, was "very formal." Questioned about reports of his departure from the White House, Adams said simply that he had nothing to say.

Although there was a known reluctance on the part of the President's associates to bring up with him the question of Adams' leaving unless Eisenhower first raises the matter, some of these same associates believed Adams had

nothing to say. Adams, according to the reporter, was "very formal." Questioned about reports of his departure from the White House, Adams said simply that he had nothing to say.

Although there was a known reluctance on the part of the President's associates to bring up with him the question of Adams' leaving unless Eisenhower first raises the matter, some of these same associates believed Adams had

nothing to say. Adams, according to the reporter, was "very formal." Questioned about reports of his departure from the White House, Adams said simply that he had nothing to say.

Although there was a known reluctance on the part of the President's associates to bring up with him the question of Adams' leaving unless Eisenhower first raises the matter, some of these same associates believed Adams had

Top-Ranking Stocks Swing Into Action

New York—(UPI)—Top-ranking stocks got into action on the upside near closing time on the Stock Exchange today.

They lifted industrials to around their best levels in more than a year. Other sections of the market registered smaller gains.

International Business Machines crossed 400 for a gain of more than 15 points. Zenith ran up seven points.

Of more importance, however, were these wide advances were a rise of more than two in General Electric and more than a point each in U.S. Steel and Westinghouse Electric.

Railroad issues joined the industrials at a slower pace. Utilities ruled firm