Bath of Mustard Said Tranquilizing

Rochester, N.Y.—(UPI)—Nerves overwrought? Try a mustard bath instead of a tranquilizer.

So says a spokesman for the R. T. French Co., whose sales organization distributes an English-made mustard.

Doctors still recommend this old-fashioned remedy, the firm said. Studies by the American Heart Journal show that the tranquilizing effect of mustard in lukewarm water is due to increased flow of blood through the capillary veins at the skin's surface.

To make a mustard bath, dissolve 3 or 4 heaping tablespoons of dry mustard in a tub of lukewarm water. Relax in the tub for 15 minutes. Rub down with a soft towel, keep warm, and sleep if possible.
