By FRANK JENKINS

Sherman Adams, resigning his position as first assistant to the President, says he does so for political reasons. He adds that in making his decision one factor he considered was whether staying on in his high position "might possibly diminish the chances which my party has of regaining control of congress in the November elections."

He charges that he has been deseged by a campaign of vilification by those seeking to remove him from public life and says it is clear these efforts "have been intended to destroy me and in so doing to embarrass the administration and the President of the United States."

H'S right, of course, on both points.

The vigor of the attack on him is for political purposes. He is resigning in an effort to soften the political consequences of what he did. That's the long and the short of it.

LETS put it this way: The attack on him has been pretty rough. But the Republicans were not gentle back in the mink coat days. Politics is politics.

UPT'S George Marder puts it pretty well in a dispatch from Washington today. He says:

"Politics is a ruthless business. Its practitioners are not notable for the quality of mercy. And so it would be naive to presume that the Democrats will let go of the corruption issue because Sherman Adams is no longer in the White House. Politics being what it is—rough and tumble at best—the Democrats will now insist that Adams' departure is a confession of guilt."

"If you heard Adams on radio and TV you know, of course, it was nothing of the kind. Ethics had nothing to do with Adams' leave-taking. Practical politics had everything to do with it."

IDOUBT if anyone—his political opponents included—thinks Sherman Adams deliberately sold political influence for a few vicuna coats and an occasional free-loading stay at a luxury hotel.

But—As Caesar himself said a long time ago, "Caesar's wife must be above suspicion." If you will consult your history books, you will find that the circumstances were surprisingly similar.

Back in those early centuries, the name of Pompeia got mixed up with an accusation against Publius Clodius, a Roman tribune of the people. Caesar divorced her—not, he explained, because he believed her guilty but because the wife of Caesar must not ven be suspected of wrongdoing.

Politics, you see, always has been politics.

Bulkeley Returns To Duty With Navy

Honolulu—(UPI)—Navy hero Capt. John D. Bulkeley return to duty today after two months of emergency treatment for serious internal hemorrhaging.

Bulkeley was stricken July 17 while commanding the fleet oiler Tolovana in mid-Pacific. He was flown here to Tripler Army Hospital for treatment.

Bulkeley won fame as commander of a motor torpedo boat squadron in the Philippines early in World War II. His exploits were recorded in the best selling book, "They Were Expensible."

PLAYS GOLF ROUND
Washington—(UPI)—President Eisenhower went to the Burning Tree Golf club in nearby suburban Maryland Wednesday afternoon for a round of golf.
