Hang It!

Tony Lane

This game is like tag except each player has three chances during the game to escape the player who is It. He can hang on to a fence, a tree branch, or anything else above the ground. The first player tagged when his feet are ON the ground is then It. This is fun!

Bach—A Musical Puzzle

By Anne Faulkner Oberndorfer

Can you read your musical notes? If so, you can read this story which substitutes notes for letters. The first word, for example is one because the musical note is "e."

(Can you read your musical notes? Then see if you can read this story.)

Poisoned Penny

Eat your friends in a circle. Using a penny, a marble, bottle cap, or pebble, have them pass it from one to the other as fast as they can, until you (or someone chosen as leader) call Stop! Whoever is holding the penny is "poisoned." Continue playing, but each time the penny reaches anyone who is "poisoned," he must pass it under one leg before handing it on to the next player. If one is unlucky enough to be caught twice, he must pass the penny under the other leg, or around his neck, or under one arm and remember these motions every time the coin comes to him, or he's out. By the time several players are going through all these contortions each time they get the penny, the game is quite hilarious.

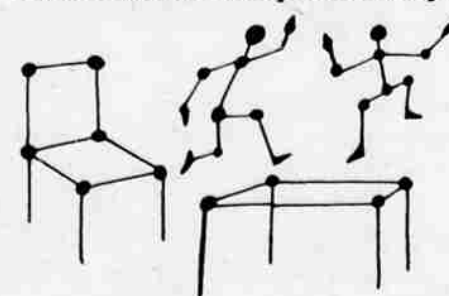

After playing for a limited time, anyone who has avoided being "poisoned" is the winner.

Fun for Twenty Cents

W. D. Hambly

A box of toothpicks will cost a dime, and a stick of modeling clay may be only five cents. The picks can easily be broken to give you a piece of wood of any length. The clay should be worked with your fingers until it is soft.

The picks are the legs of a chair or a table, or they can be the arms and legs of a person who is dancing or running. The clay is rolled into little balls, each about the size of a pea. These balls of clay are the man's knee and elbow joints, and they are also the joints for the legs of a table or a chair. In fact, you make most of the furniture for a doll's house with toothpicks and clay.

Around the World Scrapbook

Frances Hamilton

For the latest fun fad, buy a plain scrapbook. Collect a stack of picture post cards, Christmas cards, etc., from different parts of the world. On the front of the book, letter the words: "Around the world with _____." Fill in the blank with your name. Mount the cards on the inside pages, and under each card write a little paragraph about where the card came from, the date, and perhaps, the sender. Write anything you'd like to have in such a scrapbook. Be the first in your school with a Round the World scrapbook!

At the Ball Game

Ragna Eskil

Fill in the empty spaces with three- and four-letter words that begin and end with the same letter; for example, BOB and ADA.

When Bob called for Ada at ---- on Saturday to take her to the ball game, he had a huge --- for her. She put it on and they went to the game where they sat with the rest of their ---- in their class section. They all had horns to ----. The opposing team's ---- off was a ----, and their side let out a ----. Whenever there was a ----, they drank some ---. Their team won and they all said, "----! What a game!"

Answers: noon, mum, gang, too, kick, dud, roar, full, pop, wow.

What Do You See?

Nancy Clinton

Take a coin and examine it very closely for two minutes. Now put it out of sight and take a pencil and jot down the things you remember seeing on that coin. If you play this with others, anything forgotten must be paid for with a forfeit. Try it. It's fun!
