

Russia Expected To Send Man Into Space During Second Year

French scientist Alexander Ananov, founder of the World Astronautical Society in 1945, reviews the first year of the Space Age in the following dispatch and tells why he believes the second year will see the Russians sending a man into orbit around the earth.

By ALEXANDER ANANOV
(Written for United Press International)

Paris.—(UPI)—A Russian satellite with a man in it probably will be placed in orbit around the earth during the Sputnik Era's second year which we are now entering.

How the Russians expect to get him safely back to earth, I do not know. But I believe they are concentrating on this problem now and may have it solved already.

On the other hand, I regret to say I am not at all optimistic about any real success for the American moon probe project during the next 12 months.

Certainly the man event of Year One was the Russian success with the dog Laika.

By sending Laika up in her satellite, the Russians were able to collect extremely interesting and valuable information on how a living creature reacts under such conditions.

No Real Peril

The very first satellite proved conclusively that there was no real peril to space travel from the much-talked-about danger of meteorites.

The Laika experiment then showed that cosmic rays worked no serious ill effects on a living satellite passenger.

The next logical step, I believe, is to send the man safe and sound back to the earth's surface.

After talks I had with (Soviet) Prof. Leonid Sedov in Paris last year, I concluded that the Russians had in fact planned to recover Laika from her Sputnik.

Apparently something went wrong. Perhaps the mechanism which was to eject her recovered them when they landed back on the earth.

Similar American attempts to perform the same sort of exploit with mice have not yet succeeded.

The Russian success in rocket speed and power has allowed them to hoist extremely heavy payloads into orbit around the earth.

Newspaper accounts have explained this by saying that the Russians have discovered an extraordinary new fuel for their rockets.

But I believe this explanation is incorrect.

In my opinion the Russians are still using the classic rocket fuels available to all.

New Alloys Credited

I am convinced the secret of their extraordinary rocket power is a series of new metal alloys which they have discovered.

These are alloys which I believe melt at much higher temperature than any other metals known to many.

They are used to build the combustion chambers of the Russian rockets. This means very high temperatures can be developed inside these combustion chambers.

Greater heat in the combustion chamber means greater speed and lifting power in the rocket.

I believe the Americans have not yet discovered how to make these alloys. To my mind, this simple fact also explains why so many American rockets have disintegrated on launching.

Puly-Sulphite And IWA Sign Work Agreement

Portland.—(UPI)—A two year "interim working agreement" aimed at ultimate merger has been signed by the International Woodworkers of America and the International Brotherhood of Pulp, Sulphite and Paper Mill Workers, both AFL-CIO affiliates.

The executive board of the IWA completed ratification by approving the agreement in a Portland meeting. The pulp and sulphite union earlier ratified the proposal.

IWA Strong in West

Both unions have membership in both the United States and in Canada. The Woodworkers are stronger in the Pacific Northwest and British Columbia and the Pulp and Sulphite Union lists the bulk of its membership in the Northeast and South.

The IWA presently has about 130,000 members in approximately 300 locals and the pulp and sulphite in excess of 170,000 in about 800 locals.

The 10-point agreement consists of measures that are designed to establish a relationship of cooperation, good will and trust between the two organizations as an interim agreement to accomplish organic unity through merger.

Joining Banned

The interim agreement prohibits either union from joining with other unions outside themselves which would affect the other organization or nullify any provision of the agreement without consulting the other union.

Both unions, under the pact, were called on to name three members to a joint committee to implement the agreement. The IWA named its president, A. F. Hartung, Portland; J. E. Fading, Olympia, and Joe Morris, Vancouver, B. C.

Police Arrest Quota Supported

Olympia.—(UPI)—Gov. Albert D. Rosellini Monday threw his support behind the State Patrol's "quota" arrest system.

He said that statistics show that the controversial program has reduced accidents and that "if it saves lives, I am in favor of it."

Rosellini said at a news conference that he was assured by Roy A. Betlach, state patrol chief, that there would be no violation of a driver's civil rights and that arrests would not be made without a violation.

The governor said that the controversy over the system was a "departmental problem" and that he planned to leave it up to Betlach. Betlach said previously he would continue the experiment until such time as it proved ineffective.

The enforcement policy, which Betlach prefers to call a "workload system," requires officers to make a certain minimum number of contacts and arrests and issue a certain number of warnings each month. Quotas were established on an average basis within given geographic areas.

An award of merit was presented to last year's juvenile Grange matron, Icie Walker, in behalf of juvenile Grange.

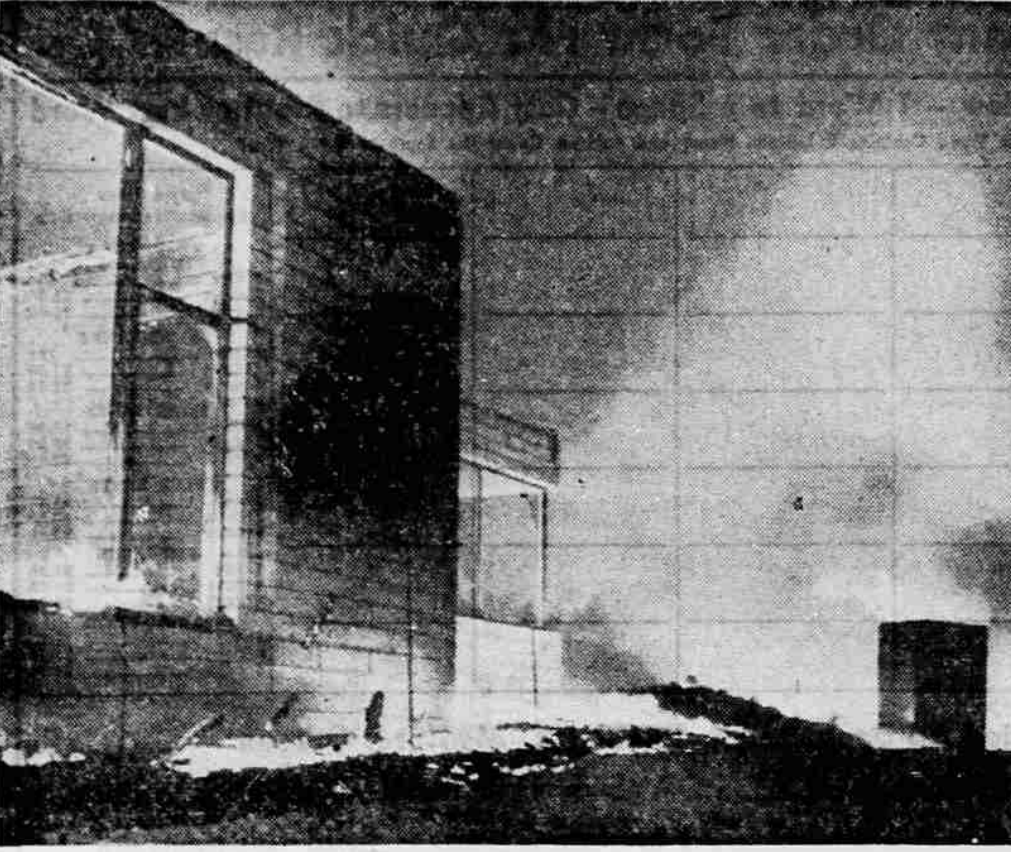

During the recent meeting of the juvenile Grange, State Supt. Mrs. Minnie Andrien gave a talk on projects outlined for the juveniles for the coming year. The children will be classified in three age groups for a talent contest. Prizes will be awarded for each age group, it was explained.
