

Is That So?

By OLGA BURNS

When a cow swallows its cud, is anything wrong with it?

The question, suggested by a letter from Mrs. Chet Marks, of Billings, Mont., touches on the matter of the so-called indigestion disease of cattle. Diseases that men imagine them as having.

The cud is food the cow has already eaten and regurgitated from its first stomach. A cow chewing its cud is generally content, chewing placidly until its next meal.

And so if a cow is neither eating nor chewing its cud for any substantial length of time, it is reasonable to suppose it is not content and quite possibly ill. And since loss of cud - failure to chew it - is a symptom of many bovine diseases, it is then well to examine the animal for other symptoms that will pinpoint the difficulty.

In the past, however, loss of cud was regarded as a disease in itself if not the result of an accident. The general procedure then was to supply the cow with an artificial cud. One type consisted of a handful of a rough weed with clusters of whitish, button-headed flowers botanically known as Gnaphalium. It proved so popular for centuries it has had the common name of cudweed.

Cure Made Cow Ill

Another imaginary disease was known as "hollow-horn," and the cure made a cow ill if he wasn't already. Fevers make a cow's horn warm to the touch, and circulatory ailments make them cold. But some herdsmen, noting a warm horn, would bore into it with an auger to see if it was hollow. If it was - and cow's horns generally are if one bores in the right place - they poured in turpentine or some other fiery substance that would cause excruciating agony, as one can imagine since the hollows are extensions of the frontal sinuses.

Yet another imaginary illness went by the name of "wolf-in-the-tail."

The tail of any animal is one of the most obvious things about the beast. Its condition often serves as a valuable indication as to health.

Some of our ancestors, however, noting a tail that was listless and without gloss, decided on the drastic measure of cutting a slit in it, packing it with salt and binding it up. Obviously the tail would no longer be listless, regardless of how the cow felt otherwise.

Plant Near Echo Damaged by Fire

Echo - UPB - An early morning fire Monday at the Butter Creek pellet plant near here caused damage estimated at more than $100,000, according to Echo Fire Chief Murl Berry.

The plant, located on the Butter Creek-Heppner highway converted hay and grain into pellets for livestock feed and had been in operation since December, 1957. Owners William Kilkenny and Louis DeTrace said most of the equipment and the building were insured.

Berry said origin of the fire was undetermined. The plant is situated on the Butter Creek-Heppner highway.

McLEOD Word Received Of Death

By Caroline L. Harding
McLeod-Word has been received here of the death of Mrs. Vera Martin in Reno, Nev., on Friday, Oct. 3. Mrs. Martin was owner of the Sierra Manor ranch on Rogue river, near McLeod.

Mrs. Martin left here Sept. 12 for Reno, then on Sept. 15 went to San Francisco for medical care. She returned to Reno and entered a nursing home there on Sept. 30, where she died after going into a coma. Burial will be in Reno.

Jacobus M. Van der Mass, age 86, died in a Medford hospital Tuesday, Sept. 30. Mr. Van der Mass was born in Amsterdam, Holland, and served in the Boer war. He was a school teacher in South Africa for several years and came to Oregon in 1908 and homesteaded at McLeod, where he farmed until failing health made him retire. He was well known here and became a naturalized citizen in Jackson county in 1914. He was a bachelor.

House guests of Mr. and Mrs. Rufus Trusty on Elk creek are Mrs. Gusty's sisters, Mrs. Hazel Hoxies, of Long Beach, Calif., and Mrs. Clara Schrader of Ainsbury, Mass.

Mrs. Fred Simington, her daughter, Cathy, and son, Fred, of Yreka, Calif., visited with Mr. and Mrs. Tom Deninger, Thursday, Sept. 25. Fred, who graduated from

Russia Protests Stalin TV Show

Washington - UPB - Russia charges Monday that recent television drama depicting the death of Josef Stalin was a "filthy slander" against the Soviet Union. It lodged a "resolute protest" with the State Department.

Soviet Ambassador Mikhail Menshikov handed the protest to Deputy Undersecretary of State Robert Murphy.

Menshikov said the play, "The Plot to Kill Stalin," was a "provocative action."

"That was a filthy slander against the Soviet Union and the Soviet government," he said.

"This kind of slanderous attack is incompatible with international standards and inadmissible in normal relations between two countries."

The television program, which appeared Sept. 25, showed events leading up to the death of Stalin in March, 1953.

The play suggested that the present Russian Premier, Nikita Khrushchev, stood idly by when Stalin suffered a stroke and refused to get medical help.

BOARD FOUNDER DIES
Long Branch, N. J. - UPB - Dr. Robert Forest Barber, 75, a founder of the American Board of Surgery, died Sunday.

Ontario - UPB - Harry McKinney, 52, a lift-truck driver at the Oregon Frozen Food plant here, was killed Monday when a concrete pier fell on him.
