

Dance Program to Open 1958 Civic Music Series

"A World of Dancing" is the title of the program which Carola Goya and Matteo, two world famous dancers, will give in Medford Monday, October 13, for Jackson County Civic Music association. The concert will be the first in the 1958-59 series for the association, memberships for which are now being taken, and will be held at Hedrick Junior High school.

The program which Goya and Matteo present has been called by critics a "treasure of ethnic dances." Both Miss Goya and her partner are not only artists of the Spanish type of dancing — classical, flamenco and regional, but they also perform the dances of a half dozen other countries. Dances from Scotland, Italy, provinces of India, of Portugal and the Polynesian islands are included. Costumes are authentic, and the music is native to the people represented.

Miss Goya, who was for three years the leading feminine dancer with the famous Jose Greco Spanish Ballet company, has been acclaimed in the leading capital cities of the world. She is so renowned for her playing of the castanets as she dances that a record has just been released which features Miss Goya's castanets and her equally notable "heel dancing." Miss Goya is the first person in musical history to appear with a symphony orchestra as a castanet soloist.

Matteo is described as an artist dancer of strong personal appeal. His re-creation of the regional dances of many nations is described by critics as having "imagination and veracity." He has been acclaimed for his knowledge and presentation of the unique art of "mudras" or Hindu hand gestures, and is also widely known for his playing of the castanets. He has made a study of the instruments, and has published a book on the subject.

Civic Music officials stressed today that only persons who have purchased season tickets may attend the concert. The annual membership campaign closes Saturday, October 11, at 5 p.m. and no memberships will be available after that date. No admissions are ever sold for single concerts.

Another artist booked for the coming season by the association is Miss Blanche Theobon, noted soprano. Two or three additional concerts will be arranged after the close of the campaign.

Since the first concert comes so quickly after the end of the campaign, membership cards will not yet be issued and admittance to Monday's concert will be by presentation of receipt stubs or postal cards mailed to renewal subscribers.

Annual Luncheon Marks Business Women's Week

While praising women for their progress in business and the professions, Mrs. Thomas Rutter, in a talk given Wednesday noon before about 100 business and professional women, pointed out that women throughout the ages have accomplished great things, not only by active participation in world affairs, but by the strong influence they have exerted over men with whom they have come in contact.

Mrs. Rutter cited Sappho, who lived during the sixth century, B.C., who was most renowned for her beautiful poetry, but who also dabbled in politics and wrote music, and whose influence over the warriors and politicians of her day was doubtless very great. She spoke of others down through the years, mentioning Susan B. Anthony, the American suffragette, and Emily Pankhurst of England, and Eleanor Roosevelt of our own time, whose influence has become more and more recognized.

Mrs. Rutter introduced two local women upon whom attention is now centered with the coming general election—Mrs. Marjane Duncan and Mrs. Eve Nye, both of whom are running for a seat in the Oregon legislature.

The Wednesday luncheon at the Jackson hotel pioneer room was supported by Medford Business and Professional Women's club as a part of National Business Women's week program. Miss Voda Brower, this year's "Beep of the Week," was honored at the luncheon. Another honored guest was Mrs. Harriet Watson, the club's 1956 "Beep."

The luncheon was attended by members from many of Medford's business, professional, and women's service clubs, including Altrusa, Zonta, Nurses' Association, National Secretaries Association, League of Women Voters, American Legion Auxiliary, C. R. A. Lions' Auxiliary, Toastmistress, and Christian Business and Professional Women's club. Miss Brower, secretary to O. A. Eden of California Oregon Power company, was also honored by a large group of women employees of that firm who attended the luncheon.

Largest Group

The National Federation of Business and Professional Women is the largest organized group in the world devoted entirely to the affairs of business and professional women, with state federations in all 48 states, in Alaska, Hawaii, Puerto Rico and the District of Columbia.

Any women employed for compensation in industry, business or in the professions, and acceptable to the local group, is eligible for membership. In June, 1958, the membership stood at 174,097 members in 3,355 clubs. Although the national federation was established in St. Louis, Mo., in 1919, this is the 30th year in which a business women's week has been observed.

Promotion of the interests of business and professional women is the main objective of the club. It works to elevate standards for women through education, industrial and vocational activity programs. The BPWC is the leader in securing legislation in the interests of women. The Medford club maintains a revolving fund from which it makes loans to women for training or education to promote themselves in their own field, or seek better-paying new ones.

A statement issued by the national office, located in Washington, D.C., says: "We are wage earners and almost 90 per cent of our members are bread-winners, for themselves and for others. We know that as employed women we are a basic part of the economic structure of our nation. We also know that we have not been given credit for our contributions to the business and professional world, nor are we accorded adequate voice where policies are analyzed and decisions made. As citizens we should not be denied equal opportunities, nor should we be discriminated against legally. There are over 1,000 discriminatory laws against women existing today. It is amazing how often new discriminations are inserted into legislative bills."

The BPWC offers a balanced action program in five particular fields: Career advancement, health and safety, international relations, national security, and public affairs. These five fields are implemented and their plans executed by a committee on legislation, when legislative measures are necessary.

Deadline Nearing On Contest

Junction City—District finals in the "Make It Yourself With Wool" home sewing contest are slated in 17 contest areas throughout the state from mid-October to the end of the month, according to Mrs. Averill Hansen, Route 1, Junction City, Oregon director of the nationwide $45,000 contest.

But even with nearing deadlines, young seamstresses between the ages of 13 and 22 have time to receive their official entry blanks if they contact Mrs. Hansen directly.

"There is hardly time to follow the usual procedure of first sending the entry form to the national contest headquarters in New York and awaiting receipt of the official form," Mrs. Hansen explained. "So to save time we have made up duplicate forms which we can rush to the girls within a day's time."

If number of entries already received are an indication, more girls are sewing and selecting woolen fabrics than ever before, Mrs. Hansen added. This year Oregon has a record number of contest entries for the contest that is in its 12th year.

Young seamstresses will compete on three levels for prizes including scholarships, sewing machines, and trips to Europe for the top winners.

First step in the national "fashion show-off," Mrs. Hansen said, is the district contest. Winners selected in local judgments and style reviews will model their championship ensembles at the statewide contest and style show at Meier and Frank company, Portland, on November 15. Final step in the contest will be in January in Portland when winners from 19 states take part in the final "show-off." The final contest and fashion show will be a major feature of the national convention of the Wool Growers' association.

Contestants in the "Make It Yourself With Wool" contest may enter three divisions: Junior, for girls 14 through 17; Senior, for girls 18 through 22; and Sub-Deb, for girls 13 through 16. Girls in training or Senior divisions may enter a suit, coat, dress, or ensemble made of wool. Girls in the Sub-Deb division which is scheduled on the district level only may make a wool skirt, jumper, or skirt and weskit.

Manpower Council Ponders Question of Working Wife

By PATRICIA McCORMACK United Press International New York — (UPI) — While they're helping to bring home the bacon, what are the nation's 13.2 million working wives doing to their husbands — and themselves? Are the husbands becoming less manly and the wives less womanly?

Dr. Henry David, executive director of the National Manpower council, says these questions are getting increasing attention from social scientists.

At the present, he said, there is no clear-cut evidence the hubby of a working wife damages his he-man ego by putting on an apron and helping with household chores. Or that his wife necessarily hurts her femininity.

Rather than being offended by the pay-check the little woman brings home, the hubby of a working wife usually greets it with open palms, Dr. David indicated.

Need Not Hurt Marriage

This is so, he said, because the earnings of most working wives help the family to achieve a better standard of living.

The expert from the Graduate School of Business at Columbia university also said there isn't any conclusive proof working makes a woman manly or less wifely.

"When a wife works," he said, "the marriage needn't suffer if the man and wife master the art of meshing their careers without making a mess of homelife."

Statistically there is no proof working wives are contributing to marital upset. As a matter of fact, the contrary appears to be the case, according to Dr. David.

He noted a recent Manpower council conference cleared the air about another charge frequently placed at the feet of working wives who also are mothers.

Katherine Brownell Oettinger, head of the U.S. Children's bureau, told conferees: "... No study has established a causal relation between maternal employment and either juvenile delinquency or the maladjustment of children."

A working mother herself, Mrs. Oettinger also had this to say about the husbands of employed wives:

"The father who takes the laundry to the Laundromat, or dries the dishes in the evening, or puts the baby to bed ... is no longer a sissy. He is just a good father and a decent partner doing his share."

"The greater partnership may often represent an asset for children — since few will deny they need fathering as well as mothering."
