Stocks Set Record On Higher Volume

New York –(UPI)– Stocks recorded a new record high today with volume again crossing the four million share mark.

A rising business curve, featured by the highest steel operations in 11 months, declining unemployment, higher metal prices, and inspiration from the thrilling attempt at a moon shot combined to give the market impetus.

Steels and non-iron metals featured the rise which spread to all sections of the market, including the oils. Chemicals produced some big gains late in the day. Drugs and special issues had some wide gainers.

LOTS OF 'PIONEERS'?—It is the hope of Centennial officials in Jackson county that a lot of "pioneers" will be created in the next few months, for the organization will need both donated funds and volunteer workers to get done the things that need to be done. As a mark of recognition for those who donate funds, or participate substantially as volunteer workers, the Centennial association has prepared certificates declaring the recipients to be an "Oregon Pioneer" in spirit and intent. The certificates are signed by M. M. Huggins, president of the Jackson County Centennial association, and Eric W. Allen Jr., regional member of the governor's advisory committee on the Oregon centennial.

Is That So?

By OLGA BURNS

The American woodcock is one bird definitely known to pick its young and carry them through the air.

This unusual act is not performed to escape the threat of immediate danger. Its purpose is generally for transportation across a stream or to a distant feeding ground. However, since the mother has been seen to drop a chick from a height of 10 or 12 feet, apparently on purpose, it may be sometimes used for flying instructions.

The mother transports her chick on the wing by tucking it between her long legs, clutching it close the youngster's bill along her breast.

But don't expect to see an example of this airlift during the woodcock migration which should reach its peak during the next few weeks.

That takes place only during late spring or high summer. By now the youngsters have long since learned everything in the astonishing bag of aerial tricks which the timberdoodle, as many call it, owns.

In fact, if you want to see any woodcock on their way south to winter in the Gulf states, the best thing to do is to go to some alder-banked stream and walk along it, taking particular pains to visit any low marshy areas nearby.

There are two reasons why. The woodcock prefers to do its migrating mainly at night. During the day it generally prefers cover of that type because there he is most likely to find the kind of food he loves–earthworms.

Strolls on Terrain

He gets them by strolling about on suitable earthworm terrain and driving his long bill deep into the ground at the most likely spots. In fact, if you find a series of holes in the ground that look as if someone had made them by thrusting a pencil into the soil, they were probably made by a woodcock.

The upper part of his three-inch bill is, in effect, hinged so that he can work it around in the soft earth, thus making the worm's escape more difficult.

Except for the migration season he does the greater part of his feeding at night, and because he generally freezes when danger threatens, and because his large eyes reflect light easily, men used to hunt them at night. They "shined" them, locating them by the reflection of light from their eyes.

Russian Nuclear Test Reported

Washington – (UPI) – The Soviet Union has tested another nuclear weapon with a "large yield."

A terse announcement from the Atomic Energy Commission Sunday said the explosion took place at Russia's Arctic weapons testing grounds. It did not say when.

The test was the seventh Soviet nuclear explosion detected by the U. S. since Sept. 30, when the Russians resumed their nuclear tests after a suspension of several months.
