

AT CORONATION—Pope John XXIII stands at the high altar in St. Peter's Basilica during mass for the crowning of the new pope. Cardinals in white look on.

The Family Council

Editor's note: The Family Council consists of a judge, a psychiatrist, three clergymen, a newspaper editor, a women's editor and two writers. Each article is a summary of an actual report. The Family Council does not give advice; it merely reports on problems that have been dealt with by responsible agencies and counselors.

Louise M.—I don't see what went wrong.

Karl S.—There are other factors besides the physical.

Louise M.—I am 23 years old and I feel like I am 40 because I have had so much trouble.

I am very much in love with Karl, a man I've known for a couple of years. I was foolish enough to let him know how much I cared. He said he wasn't sure whether he loved me enough to marry me, but suggested that we have an affair as a kind of "trial marriage."

The idea was "if things worked out" we'd get married. Well, as far as I could see everything was working out very well. Our physical relationship was a very happy one. But now Karl says he doesn't think we could ever make a successful marriage.

I don't see what went wrong. I am more in love with him than ever. We never quarreled and I am sure there is no other girl in the picture.

Karl S.—I have been unable to convince Louise that there is more to marriage than the physical relationship. There are many other factors to consider.

For one thing, we are of different faiths and I know that would cause trouble. Louise's family is very much opposed to me and I know it would break her heart to hurt them, in spite of the fact that right now all she thinks she wants is me.

There is also the fact that our interests are very far apart. Louise claims to be interested in lots of the things I care about—politics, music and sports—but she really doesn't know much about them and hasn't made much effort to learn. I always dreamed of having a wife who would share things with me. I feel our marriage would be as wrong for Louise as for me.

The Council: Aside from any moral considerations, the kind of "trial marriage" Louise and Karl have attempted is fairly sure to result in failure—even if it should end in legal marriage.

The fact is it is no real trial. In marriage the two partners commit themselves fully. If they approach this step with any rationality or sense of responsibility at all, they will first try to reach some resolution of all the factors Karl now sees as so important.

In a case like this one, the physical relationship takes over the whole show, and the partners rarely get to the stage where they can see whether they will be able to live together.

Louise has not had to wrestle with the problem of whether she can make a break with her family or bring them around to her point of view.

She has not been forced to prove she can be a partner to Karl in his interests, and Karl has not had to decide whether he wants her enough to compromise on his dream of a wife who would share his interests.

Probably they have had few or no social activities with others during this "trial" period and have no idea whether they can get along as a couple within a community.

Louise and Karl should face the fact that little or nothing has taken place between them but physical contact. If they wish to consider the possibility of marriage, they must start to do so on an entirely different level. In fairness to one another, they ought to make this attempt.

Pope Receives Press in Audience

Vatican City—(UPI)—Pope John XXIII received the world press in mass audience today to wind up 10 days of public appearances and ceremonies since his election as spiritual leader of about one-half-billion Roman Catholics. He was expected to devote the major portion of his time now to contacts with officials of the Roman Curia to receive full briefings on the manifold church affairs. He already has conferred separately with most of the non-Italian cardinals who elected him pope.

Today's audience followed the pomp and splendor of his coronation in St. Peter's Basilica two days ago, a mass audience for Italian pilgrims the same day, and an audience Wednesday for the statesmen and officials who represented 50 nations at the coronation ceremonies.
