Bean the Bag Ida M. Pardue

Place a large paper sack in the middle of the floor with its top cuffed down so it will stand open. For a party game, give each player three beans to toss at the bag from six feet away. The one bagging the most beans wins. To play with a friend, each takes a turn tossing three beans at a time. Score one for each bean bagged. The player scoring ten points first wins.

Humm! Ragna Eskil

For this game collect several items of wearing apparel such as a hair ribbon, a necktie, a necktie clip, a costume pin, or barette. Everyone sits in a circle. One player is sent out of the room, and the hostess puts one of the articles on one of the players. Or one of the players simply changes her own pin from one side of her dress to the other, or changes a ring to the other hand. Then the absent player is called back to find the change, keeping his hands behind his back while he studies everyone. As he searches, the others hum, loudly or softly, depending on whether he is close or far away. There'll be lots of laughs.

Roland, the Noble Knight

Puzzle—Find Emperor Charlemagne; Roland's mother; his friend, Oliver; the traitor, Ganelon; and Marsite, the Saracen chief.

Crazy Hunt Bill Ross

Sometime soon stage a crazy hunt at your house. Plan to play in one or two rooms and begin putting familiar objects in plain sight but in places which are wrong for their usual use. For example, tape one aspirin to a lamp, put sugar lumps or beans in a cigaret box, put a bath towel in with magazines, or a spoon and fork in a potted plant. In the bathroom arrange earrings in the toothbrush rack, tie an egg beater on one of the bathtub water taps, substitute a box of oatmeal for a jar of bath salts or soap. You get the idea. It can be hilariously funny when your friends, equipped with paper and pencil, walk through the rooms. Then without speaking, pointing, or touching, they will list the things out of place. It's real crazy! You keep a list so you can check the winner.
