

ARRESTED—Albert Freedman, producer of the TV quiz show "21," has been arrested in New York on charges of perjury, as a result of denying to a grand jury that he had supplied questions and answers to contestants appearing on the program.

What Is The Law?

This column is prepared as a public service by the College of Law, Willamette University, Salem, to explain basic legal principles, not to provide legal advice. The reader is cautioned not to apply these cases to his own problems without an attorney's advice, for differing facts may change the outcome.

Practical Joker Is Often Liable For Results of Joke

A fortune teller told Maggie, who was nearly 50, that her ancestor had buried a pot containing gold coins somewhere in the vicinity of the old homestead. Up to this time Maggie had been successfully making her living as a saleslady. It was general knowledge, however, that about twenty years earlier she had been confined in a mental hospital for treatment and care.

After learning about the supposed gold coin Maggie became very intent on finding it. With the aid of some friends she spent about three months digging in likely places. Her neighbor gave her permission for her to dig on his place. In fact, he encouraged her to do so. After she had been digging around his trees and the foundation of his house, however, he became a bit irritated and decided with others in the area, to play a joke on her.

Quite Excited
The conspirators obtained an old metal pot, filled it with wet dirt and stones, and put a double lid on it with a note between the two lids with instructions to the finder. They buried the pot in a place where they knew Maggie had planned to dig. The news got around and a number of people were on hand when she found the pot. She removed the first lid and the instructions told her to have it opened at the bank in a nearby town and to have all the heirs of the ancestor present. Maggie was quite excited. She prevailed upon a judge to be at the bank. Many people gathered and the pot was opened.

When Maggie saw what was in the pot she became hysterical and accused those around of stealing her gold. She suffered a great deal of humiliation and mental anguish and became ill. Within two years she died.

Prior to her death, however, she began legal action seeking damages from those who played the joke on her. Her heirs continued the action. Defendants argued that they did not intend to do her any harm and were merely playing a joke. The Supreme Court of Louisiana decided that they must pay $500 in damages. The court pointed out that Maggie, if she were still alive, would be entitled to substantially more.

Gunpowder and Tobacco
In an earlier case from Illinois a store owner mixed some gunpowder with pipe tobacco and put it in a jar from which plaintiff usually filled his pipe. The plaintiff was injured later while lighting his pipe. The court held the store owner liable for the injuries, even though he was merely playing a "practical joke."

Courts decided relatively few of these cases. Those that have been decided, however, are pretty much in agreement that the "practical joker" who plays these rather cruel jokes on his fellow man, should be made to answer in damages for injuries inflicted as a result of such jokes.
