The Family Council

Editor's note: The Family Council consists of a judge, a psychiatrist, three clergymen, a newspaper editor, a women's editor and two writers. Each article is a summary of an actual report. The Family Council does not give advice; it merely reports on problems that have been dealt with by responsible agencies and counselors.

Mary S. - I am not taken seriously on my job.

Mrs. L.S. - She shouldn't care about that.

Mary S. - I am 19 and a fairly popular girl. My only problem is my job - or I should say jobs. I have had about six of them in the last year. In some cases I was fired - in others I left. But it was always the same problem. I was never really given anything to do.

Wherever I work I am not taken very seriously. I'm not a bad typist, but I need experience. How am I ever going to get it if men tease me about my work and women are impatient? The big bosses never really get to know whether or not you can do anything.

I am not a flirt and I dress quite conservatively and appropriately for the office so I don't see why I should be taken for the kind of girl who couldn't do a decent job. I am serious at heart about my jobs because I expect to be working for another two years at least. My mother thinks I take this problem too seriously.

Mrs. L.S. - Mary is a lovely, sweet girl and has loads of friends and I feel she should just have a good time out of life now when she is free. I was married young and had two babies to take care of when I was her age, so I know what it is to be tied down by responsibility.

This is why it hurts me to see that Mary is so unhappy about her jobs. Whenever she loses a job she comes home and cries for two days. She feels that nobody believes she is good for anything and she is ashamed for her friends. I have tried to convince her that there is nothing to be ashamed of. Men simply find her attractive and they are more interested in her than in her work.

Just the same I think it's terrible that men insist upon bothering a nice girl who is honestly interested in her work. Mary should be given at least an even chance to prove what she can do. She's never had that.

The Council: Everytime Mary is hired she is given "at least an even chance to prove what she can do." Even a model is not employed on a purely ornamental basis. It takes know-how to handle any job properly and the employee is expected to have that know-how or to gain it as quickly as possible.

Mary shows that she has some serious desire to prove to herself and others that she is a competent person, not merely "a lovely, sweet girl." She can be both, but the road is not always easy and Mary should recognize that she must back her wishes by some discipline and will power. Mrs. L.S. is wrong to discourage Mary from making a strong effort in this direction. It is really no great compliment to a girl to get fired because she is so attractive she can't be taken seriously. Too many attractive girls are taken very seriously on their jobs.

We would suggest to Mary that she discard the rather babyish role in which her mother sees her and try to act out the role of her own ideal - an intelligent and able young woman, who is ready to put forth the best in her.

If she thinks of herself as this kind of person, she will begin to look and act the part and she will easily convince others. She should always remember that others will react to whatever social role she appears to be playing and if others do not take her seriously, it can only be because something about her suggests that she does not expect herself to be taken seriously. Walnut Market Order Explained

Corvallis - Small-volume growers of English walnuts are free to sell directly to consumers without going through federal marketing order inspections required for commercial sales, reports an Oregon State college marketing specialist.

Up to 500 pounds unshelled or 200 pounds shelled walnuts may be sold directly to consumers through roadside stands or other direct sales methods without inspection, says Roland H. Groder, OSC fruit and vegetable marketing specialist.

Marketing regulations for the 1958 crop permit only 91 per cent of a grower's total production to be sold through retail or other commercial outlets following inspection by the state department of agriculture's inspection service, Salem.

Groder says any buyer planning resale of walnuts may be asked to show a certificate of inspection or other evidence that nuts were inspected. Purpose of the regulation is an attempt by growers to stabilize prices. The surplus withheld from domestic markets will be sealed and channeled later into export or oil manufacture. Groder says the marketing order also assures that only top quality walnuts go into domestic markets.

ON THE MOVE
New York-LUPI-One out of every five persons in the U.S. one year old or over will have changed his place of residence during the year ended Oct. 31, 1958, according to the Gas Appliance Manufacturers association. It said "the moving-est people in the country are westerners... 27 per cent of whom pulled up stakes last year. Next came southerners, followed by residents of the north central states and then those in the northeast.
