Navajo Missile Explodes in Flight

Cape Canaveral, Fla. —UPI— The explosion of a Navajo missile high over the Atlantic set the Air Force back a notch today in its research project for the first true intercontinental bomber.

The delta-winged Navajo, sent up to probe the effects of high-altitude supersonic flight at the 13-mile level, burst apart at about 50,000 feet Tuesday and smashed into the Atlantic after a two-minute flight.

It was the sixth missile to explode in a three-month period. The others were an inter-continental Atlas, an intermediate range Jupiter and a Thor IRBM, plus two Polaris test rockets.

The Air Force said the Navajo wobbled out of control after 60 seconds of flight and destroyed itself.

Oregon State To Get Nuclear Reactor

Salem —UPI— Operation of a nuclear reactor at Oregon State college has been assured with the receipt of formal word from the Atomic Energy Commission by Gov. Robert D. Holmes.

The governor said the commission has approved a license for the operation.

The reactor will be a small training model with a power level restricted to 100 milliwatts by the AEC order. The reactor will be installed in the engineering laboratory.

The machine will be Oregon's first reactor. It was made possible by a grant of $165,000 from the Atomic Energy Commission.
