Price Picture Fairly Stable On Farm Goods

Corvallis — Prices received by farmers in Oregon dropped less than 1 per cent during the month ending Oct. 15, in contrast to national farm prices which were down 2 per cent, according to Mrs.
Elvera Horrell, extension agricultural economist at Oregon State College.

Lower prices on citrus fruits led the national downward trend in farm prices, Mrs. Horrell said, after examining reports from the U.S. department of agriculture.
However, hogs, cotton, eggs, and corn also dropped enough to more than offset higher prices tags on milk, wheat, and some fresh vegetable crops.

In spite of the declines, Oregon farm prices are still 3 per cent and national farm prices 5 per cent above those of a year ago.

Retail Prices Climb
Meanwhile, prices of things farmers buy continued to climb to a new record high.
Family living items moved up as higher prices on clothing, household supplies, and home furnishings more than offset lower prices on food and building materials. Wage rates paid farm workers moved to a new, all-time high. Prices paid by farmers for production items, on the other hand, moved down as lower feed prices were only partially offset by higher fertilizer and replacement livestock.
With prices of things farmers sell down, and prices of goods and services they buy up, the purchasing power of farm commodities shrank last month, Mrs. Horrell pointed out. The parity ratio—the government's measure of the relationship between prices received and prices paid by farmers—dropped to 82 at mid-October, three points below Sept. 15 of this year but still one point above a year ago.
