

Secret of Good Shave Said in Soaking Face

New York — If a man can brush his teeth, make a cup of coffee, or read a newspaper, there's no reason for him to get a poor shave. The secret, according to shaving authority Elbridge J. Casselman, is to brush teeth, make coffee or read the newspaper while your face is wet.

Casselmann says that even though most men spend between 10 and 15 minutes a day shaving, they often skip the most important step in the process.

"They don't soften the beard properly," he complained. "It takes three minutes of soaking to soften the beard properly. That way, the blade lasts longer and you get a smoother shave. Men with gray or white hair should soak the beard a little longer because their hair is more resistant to softening."

Authoritative Work
Casselmann is a tall, white-haired gentleman who is the inspirational clean-shaven manager of research and development for Gem Razors in Staunton, Va.

His shaving masterpiece, entitled, "Factors Involved in Satisfactory Shaving," was published by the American Medical Association in 1937 and still is the authoritative work on the subject.

How does Casselman recommend that men prepare the face for a shave?

"First, wash your face with hot water and toilet soap. Then rinse it. This removes the grit and the natural oils. Then wash and rinse the face again."

"I tell men to wash again mainly to kill time. Let those hairs soak. If three minutes aren't consumed yet, they'd better find a way to kill more time."

Leaves Face Wet
"Personally, I wash my face twice and go into the kitchen to put up the coffee. I leave my face wet. Some men brush their teeth after that second rinse. Others put on their socks and shoes as the beard soaks. Or take a shower. That can kill 10 minutes and that's the best way.

"But," added Casselman, "the main thing is to kill three minutes before lathering up. It's a management problem."

Girl in Role of Middie at Academy; Commander, Midshipmen Demoted

Annapolis, Md. — Embarrassed officials of the U.S. Naval Academy have disclosed that the brigade commander and two other midshipmen were demoted because an impish 17-year-old high school girl masqueraded as a Middie.

The news leaked out Wednesday that perky Susan Johnson, daughter of a Baltimore doctor, had donned the white uniform of a Middie, tucked her hair under a regulation cap and marched to dinner with the boys.

A grim Academy official reluctantly allowed it was all too true that the "high spirited" girl had not only marched to dinner with the brigade but had stood smartly at attention at night formation and visited briefly in the sacrosanct lounge of Bancroft hall before merrily skipping away.

Demote Brigade Commander
Cmdr. Marcy Dupre, Academy public relations officer, said Midshipman James Wilson of Philadelphia was stripped of his top spot as brigade commander. Two other officers — Battalion Commander Robert L. Vogt of Norfolk, Va., and Company Commander Douglas Volgenau of Clarence, N. Y. — also were demoted.

The two cadets described as directly involved were identified as William R. Evans of Trenton, N. J., and Michael J. Brown of Guyman, Okla. They were reported awaiting the wrath of Academy officials.

The female invasion of the academy occurred earlier this month. Susan, who obviously had been coached on procedures at the rigidly-disciplined academy, picked up the step of the 3,600-man brigade as it formed to march to the dining hall.

Visits Bancroft Hall
She stood at attention behind a straight-backed chair just like any other cadet and then dug in. Later she stood stiffly in formation and was dismissed for the night with the other cadets. She took a final jab at tradition by dropping in at the Bancroft hall lounge, taboo to visitors except on very rare holidays, before making a clean getaway.

The getaway was a clean one only for her, however. The brigade commander was demoted, although he apparently knew nothing of the escapade, for "displaying a lack of judgment." Dupre said Wilson's errors were not errors of commission, but rather of omission. He said the demotion would not jeopardize Wilson's naval career. Dr. Marius Johnson, the

APPLEGATE VALLEY Points to Be Designated

By MAUDE ZIEGLER
Applegate Valley — Historic points in the Applegate valley will be designated for the Centennial year by wooden markers shaped in the outline of the map of Oregon, it was decided at a meeting of the local centennial committee at the Robert Sorber home recently.

Sorber, local chairman, was asked by Ernie Hood, county chairman, to design the markers for the county, and with the advice of his committee, Sorber is submitting the state design, probably three or four feet in length. It is the plan of the committee that the markers will be painted in the state colors of blue with gold lettering.

The Sterling mine, discovered 104 years ago, and which became the largest placer producer in southern Oregon, is among sites selected for marking in the Applegate district. Log Town, once a thriving mining town of a century ago located on the pack trail between Jacksonville and Crescent City, will be marked, as will the site of Uniontown, a trading center of that time for Chinese miners whose village was located near the mouth of the Little Applegate.

Other sites selected will be the Bauten stage house site on the Jacksonville highway, the Kubli "mill," Steamboat mine, and Squaw Creek and Mule Hill, associated with the slaying of Martin Angel by Indians.

It is planned that each marker will be numbered, and that visitors will be provided booklets with corresponding numbers stating where the complete story of the site may be found. These wooden markers will be of secondary importance in the state, because bronze plaques will be accorded sites on the "priority" marking list.

Sixty plants of the Log Town rose will be transplanted to beautify the entrance to Log Town cemetery during December, it was decided at a meeting of the Applegate Valley Garden club Wednesday at the home of Mrs. Lance Offenbacher.

The rose, identified by Marcel LePiniec, well known botanist, as the Harrison yellow rose, was brought from the midwest by members of the McKee family.

Garden club ladies will employ a posthole digger to dig the two-foot holes for setting the plants, which will be the first Centennial objective to be accomplished here.

At the Wednesday meeting of the garden club, Mrs. Glenn Smith spoke on indoor planters and care of houseplants. Guests of the club were Mrs. Raymond Lomas, Mrs. Lea Wright, and Mrs. Jack O'Brien of the community.

Mrs. Harry Davis entertained with a birthday dinner Sunday honoring Arthur Street of Phoenix. Others attending were Mrs. Street and Mr. and Mrs. Otis Buck.

Flag To Survive White House Work

Washington — Wrecking crews are fast tearing down the east front of the U. S. Capitol but the American flag, which flies there 24 hours a day, will wave through it all.

J. George Stewart, architect of the Capitol rebuilding, said plans have been made to keep the flag flying night and day through the reconstruction of the east front. Initially a temporary staff will be erected just behind the traditional location, at the base of the dome and angled outward.

The east front is being rebuilt exactly duplicating the old front except it will be made of marble instead of the crumbling sandstone it now consists of. The job will take two years.
