

State Budgeteers Completing Work On Agency Requests

Salem —UPD— State budget-makers were on the final lap of their work here today trying to reconcile requests from numerous state agencies.

One of their larger headaches has been requests from the State Board of Higher Education and the Board of Control for more than $30 million for building purposes.

The higher education group seeks $20,565,000 for building on various campuses. The Board of Control wants $10,308,953 for building at state institutions.

These figures asked by the two agencies will appear in the 1959-61 budget, but alongside them will be recommendations from Gov. Robert D. Holmes.

Bond Issue Favored

Gov. Holmes has indicated he favors that a bond issue be voted on by the people for building purposes which would make it much easier for the 1959 Legislature to find money enough to go around under the existing tax structure.

Gov.-elect Mark Hatfield also can make recommendations to the Legislature, but hasn't made up his mind on the bond issue plan as yet.

In the 1957 Legislature, both the Board of Higher Education and the Board of Control had about 50 per cent cut from what they had asked for capital improvements.

Their requests this time are about 2½ times what they were in 1957.

Requests Listed

Included in the Board of Control budget is a new women's prison costing about $1,815,000. It also seeks $2,223,550 for 500 more beds at Fairview home.

For the first phase of Dam-nasch State hospital near Wilsonville, some $1,696,203 will be needed.

The Board of Higher Education as part of its six-year, $60 million program seeks this time: University science building additions, $3,300,000; Portland State College classroom building, $2,750,000; Oregon State physics-chemistry building addition, $2,515,000; Portland State science building, $2,050,000; Oregon State agricultural and biological science building, $1,365,000; University medical school research building, $1,250,000; and a university library building addition, $1,100,000.

Army Ready For Moon Shot

Cape Canaveral, Fla. —UPD— The Army appeared almost ready today to send its first moon rocket hurtling into unexplored space in a vital radiation-measuring mission.

The 140-foot-tall service tower of the Army's moon bird moved back from the rocket Tuesday, exposing a vehicle that bore a striking resemblance to the Jupiter-C rockets that put three satellites into orbit in six tries.

Although there has been no official announcement, the Army is expected to fire the tall Juno II rocket some time this week end.

The Army's moon vehicle appeared fully assembled when it was revealed Tuesday. And, since the Army always test fires the engines at its missile headquarters in Huntsville, Ala., prior to launching them here, it appeared that only final checks were necessary prior to firing.

Dr. Werner von Braun, German-born Army missile chief, has said the Army will aim its rocket at the moon. But he said that because of the lack of an adequate guidance system, the Juno II probably will miss the moon and eventually become a satellite of the sun, millions of miles away.

Jubilee Directors Review Progress

Cave Junction — The Illinois Valley Jubilee association reviewed progress made by chairmen in charge of special events at a directors meeting recently.

E. V. Cooke reported on the timber and mining show plans for the annual Labor Day celebration and his estimated $1,500 budget to produce the shows was approved by the board.

While the actual Jubilee celebration is scheduled for the three-day Labor Day holiday, there will be special events sponsored by the association during the 100 days Centennial observance.

Tentative plans were outlined for logging and mining excursions as attractions for the Centennial guests stopping in the valley. Details of the events will be worked out with the Valley Centennial committee.

Other special events and attractions were discussed, and it is planned that a program will be ready for presentation about the first of the year.
