

Medford Man Seeks Brothers' Friends

Thorsten Lundberg, 217 South Riverside ave., is engaged in a "sentimental search" for two men who once knew his late brother, Hugo Lundberg.

Thorsten Lundberg relates that he ran away from home as a young man, changed his name to James Kelly (a name he still uses), and after serving in World War I spent his life railroading. He saw his father, the late Hugo Lundberg, before his death in 1957 at the age of 91 in Medford, Lundberg (or Kelly) was among his possessions a picture of his brother, taken at Swens studio sometime in the early 20s. With him in the picture are two young men, who he cannot identify but who he would like to meet.

He asks that anyone knowing who they might be to get in touch with him. His brother died of pneumonia about 1923, he said.

The Medical Roundup

Huntington's Chorea
A few people write, greatly distressed because a child or grandchild has Huntington's chorea. The people are unhappy because no doctor will promise them any help. Actually, this is one of those inherited diseases of the nervous system which are so devastating and for which as yet physicians have absolutely no treatment.

When any part of the nervous system was built poorly because of a bad inheritance, and then starts to go to pieces, there is no way a doctor can go in to rebuild it. I fear we will never find a cure.

Hence it is that in all these cases I beg the people not to waste all their family savings on traveling around from one clinic to another. If a good neurologist says that it is Huntington's chorea and no one knows of any treatment, the people should not keep traveling about. I know how hard it is to sit still and do nothing when an adored child is perhaps going blind and becoming paralyzed.

Sometimes after writing a hopeless column like this, I get a number of very angry and very hurt letters from mothers who say they'll mortgage everything the family has so that they can keep paying one quack after another — anyone who will even attempt to cure the patient. One woman just wrote me that she even went to Germany to see a quack she had heard of through a friend. But all he did was to take her money.

While I admire the great devotion of mothers like this who "won't give up," I always feel like saying to those who have perhaps one idiot child and three brilliant and able ones, "Can't you see how unfair and unwise you are — spending all your savings on a child who can never grow up, while you are dooming to hard times and perhaps a lack of education, your other fine children who can be of great use to the world?"

A few hundred times I have seen parents behave in this very unwise and unfair way. My heart goes out to them and I understand their behavior, but still I am sure they are very wrong.

Achlorhydria of the Stomach
People write asking me what on earth are they going to do, now that it has been found that they have no acid in their stomach. Usually, I tell them that I doubt if they need be at all concerned. One of my relatives has absolutely no acid in her gastric juice and she has the digestion of an ostrich.

Usually, people with achlorhydria do not have symptoms. Some were born with a lack of acid, and others developed it as they grow older, just as a man develops a bald head as he grows older.

My associate, Dr. Francis Vanzant, and I once showed that one in four persons 60

Washington—UPI—State Republican Leader William F. Knowland said Thursday he believes Vice President Richard M. Nixon possesses "very eminent qualifications" for the presidency.
