

Seaton Sees Three Revolutions Necessary for Republican Party

By A. ROBERT SMITH
Mail Tribune Washington
Correspondent

Washington - If Secretary of Interior Fred A. Seaton was disheartened by the

A. Robert Smith
A. Robert Smith sign of it in his first political speech since the election.

In a "let's bind up our wounds" sort of speech to Western Republicans meeting in Honolulu last week end, Seaton said the GOP must accomplish three revolutions in the next 19 months if it is to make a comeback in the elections of 1960 which will decide the presidency.

Seaton cited a Gallup poll, showing that if all Americans were now to register as voters, 54 per cent would line up as Democrats and only 36 per cent as Republicans. This indicated that "a split party is a luxury only Democrats can occasionally afford. We Republicans can't afford it at all. In our party today a wing doesn't have a prayer, much less any chance of victory."

Revolutionize Thinking
Seaton's "three revolutions" were:

1. We have to revolutionize our thinking about politics and campaigning.

To some Republicans, "politics is a four-letter word." Some will vote Republican, but they "won't run, work, contribute or sometimes even talk Republican." Democrats learned long ago that elections aren't won in the last four weeks before the election and Republicans "should have learned it the hard way by now."

"Looking to 1960, we should be determined that everyone who shares our beliefs about government get into politics up to the chin," said Seaton. He called for recruiting of the most capable and articulate candidates for all top offices, citing such examples of this as Oregon's Gov.-elect Mark Hatfield and New York's Gov.-elect Nelson Rockefeller.

2. The second "much-needed" Republican revolution is the shift from negative to positive thought, from reverse to forward drive.

Seaton said the Eisenhower administration has succeeded in maintaining the peace, keeping the nation's defense strong, providing Americans with both a tax cut and a higher than ever standard of living.

"Yet in political debate, what happens? Time and again we Republicans find ourselves cleverly maneuvered into seemingly supporting reaction and negation because of our necessary and valid resistance to the wild, even if politically appealing, proposals of the opposition," Seaton said.

Democrats are for more of everything - airport money, road money, small business money and farm price supports - and at the same time want lower taxes and lower interest rates, he charged, and called this program "a phony." But he said Republicans have failed to prove to the voters that it is a phony.

3. The GOP must show that when it stands for preserving the value of the dollar, this is the best way of being for the man - including the wage earner, the farmer, the housewife and their children.

"What good are wage or profit rises if offset by price increases and more taxes? What good is it to talk about bigger and better insurance policies or higher pensions when their value is constantly being eaten away by the cancer of inflation?" asked Seaton.

Can Reveal True Image
"By ripping off once and for all the false labels our opponents have pasted on us, we can reveal the true image of the Republican party as the part of the American people - all 175 million of them. You and I know that the Republican party is not, and never will be, a kept political party.

Seaton recalled that the Conservative party in England was voted out of office by over 2,000,000 votes in 1945 after the war. But Winston Churchill called on Lord Woolton to rebuild the party. So in 1951 the Conservatives returned, and are still in power in Britain.

"We can and must put fight and heart into our party," declared Seaton. "Once we've accomplished that, we will win."

Graf Zeppelin Stamps Now Collector's Item

If you happen to be one of the fortunate people who bought or acquired one or more of the Graf Zeppelin stamps our government brought out in 1930, you had better hang on to it. The rate at which the value rises makes it one of the better investments.

The value soared so because the issue proved to be one of the most unpopular our government ever put out.

The stamps, issued to pay for mail carried by the Zeppelin on its flight from Germany to the United States and back, via Spain and Brazil, were sold only during May and June. Over 1,000,000 stamps in each of the three values had been printed, but when they were withdrawn from sale on June 30, over 90 per cent of each were still unsold and were subsequently destroyed.

The three denominations are: 65c green, $1.25 yellow brown and $2.60 blue. They carry the legend "Graf Zeppelin Europe-Pan American Flight United States Postage," and each has a different picture of the huge dirigible. What caused the stamps to be so unpopular is something of a mystery. It couldn't have been lack of collectors, because proportionately there were very nearly as many in the country then as there are today. It is also unlikely that it was due to political feeling. Hitler had not yet come to power and the scars of World War I were fairly well healed.

In any event, so few of the stamps found their way into the hands of collectors that even an unused 65c one commands a price today of $35, and a used one, not on its original cover, has a price tag of $20.

As for those fortunate individuals with the foresight to buy these stamps as issued in sheets of 50, they are really in a position to cash in. The last quotation I saw on a sheet of the $2.60 denomination, representing an original outlay of $130, was $3,700. However, the price of the individual stamp has risen so that the true value of such a sheet would be nearer $4,000.

HULL'S OAK TREE SHILLINGS AMONG FIRST MINTED

Most people have heard of the pine tree shilling, but not so many know there are also "oak tree" and "willow tree" shillings - the latter being far the more valuable.

All of them were made in the first mint in North America which was operated in the rear of the home of one John Hull, at Boston, Mass.

Though any of these coins one is likely to see looks like a strictly amateur production, that isn't due to Hull. Instead, it is due to the fact many of our Puritan ancestors were not above clipping off the edges of the silver coins before attempting to pass them on at face value.

Hull himself was well paid. The colonial government allowed him to keep every 20th coin he produced. They wanted to stimulate his production, and they certainly succeeded. He wouldn't even bother to make new dies, which is why all his coins have the same date, 1652.

ENGLISH POET'S WORK ON BLAKE IS SOUGHT-AFTER

Algernon Charles Swinburne was one of the greatest English poets, but he also had a high reputation as a critic, and so some of his prose writings are valuable.

There are many of them, and among the most interesting if not the most valuable, from a collector's viewpoint, is his book, "William Blake, a Critical Study."

The book, which contains 111 illustrations taken from Blake's designs in facsimile, was published in London in 1867. The first issue was limited to six copies, but in the three subsequent issues, all in the same year, were in a sufficient number to make the work fairly common. The three can be distinguished from each other by the title of a vignette that appears on the title page. In the second, it is "Ithuriel"; the third, "Zamiel"; the fourth, "Going to and From the Earth."

Copies of the four issues may be found in either a cloth or leather binding. All contain 304 pages.

The value of the book is due heavily as much to Blake as it is to Swinburne. Blake, whether he is generally credited with it or not, was the father of free verse. He wrote reams of it. In addition, he was a mystic of extraordinary powers, an artist of great ability, and, for a time at least, was such an advanced political thinker that he was in great danger of being imprisoned.

As to the price such a book would bring, I have seen a copy of the third issue, in a cloth binding and in excellent condition, sell for $30. However, since copies of even the second edition, published in 1868, have sold for up to $35 in recent years, it is quite probable that a higher price would be realized today.

No copy of the first issue, so far as I know, have ever gone on the market. (Released by McClure Newspaper Syndicate)

LITTLE KNOWN FACTS ON DIAMONDS BY WEISFIELD'S

Authorized Member of The Diamond Council of America

Have you ever asked yourself why the diamond ring is regarded as a symbol of betrothal? The answer embodies romance, adventure and fascinating legends. From the earliest of times, men toiled and struggled—even fought and died—to possess this sparkling, fiery gem.

Legend established the diamond as a lifelong emblem of faith and affection. To many, the fire of a diamond suggested the flame of love. Still others believed that a diamond possessed a charm against evil—if the man who owned it was pure in mind and soul. This charm was passed on to the fiancée—when she was given the diamond.

Through the years, the diamond indicated a woman loved someone and was loved. That is why the diamond was worn on the third finger, left hand—for it was once believed that a vein of love ran from this finger to the heart.

We, here at Weisfield's will be happy to help you choose a diamond for yourself or loved one. The diamond that you buy at Weisfield's will reflect the eternal faith and devotion that you wish to express.
