Show Cause Order Issued Columnist

New York – (UPI) – A federal judge has ordered television columnist Marie Torre of the New York Herald Tribune to show cause Dec. 30 why she should not begin serving a 10-day jail sentence for contempt of court.

Judge Sylvester Ryan issued the show cause order Monday as a result of a refusal by the U.S. Supreme Court to review the case.

The show cause order clears the way for motions on the part of Miss Torre's attorney to delay execution of the sentence.

The columnist was convicted of contempt in November, 1957, for refusing to identify an executive of the Columbia Broadcasting System whom she quoted in a conference to singer Judy Garland.

Commercial manufacture of grease began in the 1800's.

The Medical Roundup

by Walter Alvarez

Emeritus Consultant in Medicine, Mayo Foundation
Emeritus Professor of Medicine, Mayo Foundation

Tic Douloureux

Many an elderly woman writes, wondering what she can do about tic douloureux.

Dr Alvarez

She has tried several kinds of "pain-killers" and none have worked. Then she had all of her teeth out, which was very foolish. Some doctor should have kept her from doing this. What happens to the unhappy woman (the patient is usually a woman past 50) is that every so often she gets a series of needle-like jabs of pain which nearly drive her crazy. They occur usually on one side of her face, and in one area. They may come if she talks or eats, or is hit by a draft. Occasionally, she will go about with a shawl wrapped around her face.

The cause of the pain appears to be something wrong with the ganglion of the fifth nerve which supplies the face with pain-perceiving fibers. Usually the woman should go right off to an expert neurosurgeon who can inject alcohol into the ganglion of the affected nerve. If, after months of relief, the pain should come back, the next thing to do may be to have an operation on the ganlion Fortunately, in recent years, nerve surgeons have found that just the freeing-up of the tissues around the ganglion will often give relief. Removal of the gangloin is not ideal because it causes a somewhat distressing loss of sensation in half of the face; also trouble with the eye. If dust gets into this eye, the person doesn't feel it, and the first thing she knows she has a dangerous conjunctivitis.

Loss Of A Man's Sexual Potency in The 40s

Men write wondering why they have lost their potency or desire, in their 40s or 50s. Some of them wonder if it could be due to the fact that they drank heavily in their youth. Others wonder if it could be due to the fact that they have a tendency to melancholia much like that of some of their depressed relative who had a nervous breakdown and had to go to a mental hospital. Some say that when they are moody and without any feeling of joy in anything they lose all interest in sex.

Many a wife writes wondering why her husband has lost interest. Usually, she says she has tried hard to get him to go to a doctor, but he will not go. Other women say they did get their husband to a doctor and had him heavily dosed with male hormones, but this didn't do any good.

If, as in rare cases, I get a chance to talk to the man, I may find that one of his main troubles is that he has lost his love for his wife and his sexual interest in her. Perhaps she never refused his advances, but he says she was never much interested in sex, or at all cooperative, and this made him feel guilty and unhappy. So finally he decided to quit. He did not bother her any more. As he said, if she could have been loving with him he would probably have remained potent until he was over 70.

Other men said that as they grew older their desire alone was not always sufficient to make them potent; they would have been potent if there had been some response from their wives in the way of affection and interest. In some cases the wife explained that her loss of interest was due largely to the fact that she was annoyed, and sometimes outraged because she had the impression that her husband came to her, not because of affection, but simply because of his physical need. Other wives were not affectionate because their husbands had so often blown their tops because of violent temper, and had said terrible things. Other wives, for one reason or another, had lost respect for their husband, or had been outraged on learning of one or two extra-marital affairs they had had. Several wives were disgusted because often their husbands became desirous only because they had drunk too much.

Difficulty Psychic

In some cases the husband said that his wife had got so stout that he felt offended. The more I talk to men who have lost sexual interest in their 40s or 50s, the more impressed I am with the fact that their difficulty is more psychic than physical. Curiously, the unconscious part of a man's brain may feel very desirous, but if an "unconscious" part of his brain feels dissatisfied, or a bit disgusted or ashamed or repelled, nothing can happen.

The advice that a physician of much experience would give to people starting out in marriage would be, "Both of you, try never to do anything that will destroy the happiness of sex." The wife should try never to humiliate the man by refusing him or by showing lack of interest, and the man should try never to do anything that will cause his wife to feel hurt or outraged or just "used" without any affection.
