Gerard J. — I am a widower in my 40s. I have no children. About a year ago I met a woman of my own age who was separated from her husband because of his unfaithfulness. We were both very lonely and unhappy at that time, and we immediately started to have an affair. We soon realized that this was no mere escapade. We were very much in love and wanted to get married.

Around this time, Elaine's teen-age daughter began to realize what was going on and she ran off to her grandmother's home. She says she won't come back unless her mother swears that she'll have nothing more to do with me. She says if we marry she'll never look at her mother again. I am sure she'll get over all of this and we should go ahead with our plans.

Elaine S. — I don't know what came over me to do something that is so much against my own ideals and upbringing, but I blame it all on my husband for the terrible thing he did to me. I realize that two wrongs don't make a right and that's why I don't blame my daughter Linda for running off like that and hating me. She is still a child and could not understand how I felt when my husband treated me like that. All she knew was that her mother was just as bad as her father.

I love Gerard and feel that we could have been happy together if we had not been so impulsive. The way I feel now I don't want anything of mine to get in the way of my doing my duty as a mother. I want to make it up to Linda, even if I have to sacrifice my happiness.

The Council: It is quite true that her parents' marital misconduct was an injustice to this teen-age girl, but to hand her a moral whip with which to tyrannize her mother would be worse than foolish.

Elaine's guilt feelings about her misconduct go so deep that she seems to enjoy the chance to make a "sacrifice" of her happiness for her daughter. She should realize that in the long run this plan will do nobody concerned any good. The momentary relief of Elaine's guilt feelings will quickly pass, and she will rather resent her daughter's having deprived her of happiness. Then it will be the daughter's turn to feel guilty. It would be as nasty a vicious cycle as we've ever seen.

If Elaine is sincere about her feeling for Gerard and not simply using her daughter as an "out" from a relationship she no longer desires, her path is very simple. She must tell the whole truth to her daughter. A teen-age girl will understand if her mother explains about her deep hurt and shows that she recognizes and regrets her error. Elaine can explain that she is now looking forward to making a real home for her family and that a husband is a vital ingredient.

If Linda still says she'll have nothing to do with her mother, she should be allowed to sulk it out. She can't fail to recognize that she is in the wrong unless she is determined to carry that chip for the rest of her life. In that case, giving in to her would never help.
