

Miss Margaret McGee, pictured here during a dinner Tuesday night at Mary's Casa in her honor, has gone to Washington, D.C. to join the staff of Congresswoman Edith Green.

Margaret McGee Joins Staff Of Congresswoman Green

Miss Margaret McGee, Cave Junction and formerly of Medford, was honored Tuesday evening at a no-host dinner at Mary's Casa by members of the Medford Business and Professional Women's Club.

Miss McGee left yesterday for Washington, D. C. where she will be on the staff of Congresswoman Edith S. Green, Representative of the third district from Oregon.

Miss McGee is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John M. McGee, Cave Junction and is a graduate of the University of Oregon where she majored in journalism. While in college she also studied languages and spent two summers at the University of Mexico in Mexico City.

The local woman was on the staff of the Democratic state headquarters in Portland and earlier this year was with the Jackson County Democratic Central Committee here. During 1955 she was employed by the California Oregon Power Company.

Following her graduation from College Miss McGee attended State Department's Foreign Service Institute in Arlington, Va. From 1947 until 1955 she was employed by the United States Foreign Service and served at American embassies in Lima, Peru, and Belgrade, Yugoslavia, before returning to Washington, D. C. for assignment there. Her duties varied from secretarial work to research analysis.

Miss McGee explained that the Foreign Service Institute basic training lasted for three months during which time she learned the culture and customs of the various countries.

She speaks Spanish, French, Italian, and Serbo-Croatian fluently and has knowledge of Russian and Portuguese. Local members attending the dinner were Miss Voda Brower, Mrs. Harriet Watson, Miss Lucille Lenox, Miss Laura York, Miss Peggyann Hutchinson, Mrs. Florence Lance, Mrs. Bertha Haskins, and Mrs. Georgia White.

Miss McGee has been a member of the local chapter of B.P.W.C. since 1956.

'Outdated Morality' Said Barrier for Teen-agers

By MARY PRIME United Press International New York—The nation is failing to educate children properly because it has built emotional barriers around teen-agers, says an author and teacher, Charles J. Calitri.

"One of the biggest emotional barriers built up between parents and children is caused by sex," said Calitri, whose second novel, "Strike Heaven On the Face," was published recently by Crown.

He believes that our society's "outdated morality" has cut off many teen-agers boys and girls from their parents and their teachers.

"This barrier results from parents' embarrassment or fear of the subject of sex. Sex-talk is something we have to learn to live with. Sexual adjustment is a vital part of teen-age life. But until we can talk to our children in a mature and adult way without embarrassment, we will continue to confuse their attitudes toward it, and will fill ourselves with anxiety over teen-agers' behavior," the author said.

"A major problem which teachers, as well as parents, face, is finding a way to break down the barrier. We must learn to speak teen-agers' language, get them to trust us and listen to us. In everyone's life, there is at least one teacher who is remembered above all others. That is the teacher who reached us and made us want to learn," he added.

Calitri, who lives in Elmhurst, N. Y., sold his novel to a movie studio (MGM) for more than $200,000 but returned to his teaching job in a New York high school. His mother and father were teachers, and his wife is a teacher. The father of two boys, aged 13 and 10, he wrote the book because he feels something must be done about American education.

"The nation learned suddenly last year, with the Soviet Union's first Sputnik, that education is not something you can take for granted," Calitri said. "You cannot simply appropriate money and build bigger and better schools and expect to turn out better educated children. There is no question that we need more schools and more teachers, but we need even more a new philosophy toward education and teaching."

"The only way to reach students and to inspire them to learn is to stimulate them, intellectually and emotionally, until the student is deeply involved in learning," he added.

"The student who gets angry with a teacher over a political issue, who falls in love with the heroine of a novel, or accepts the challenge of an unsolved mathematical formula is the student who is on his way to learning," said Calitri.

"The teacher who can stimulate reactions in his students also can stimulate the learning process. Unfortunately, our schools have too many teachers who are not inspired by their work or have not been adequately prepared by their colleges."

"We need to reappraise our methods of teaching the teachers. We also need a new kind of textbook that will make learning exciting."

"The Sputnik age brought a severe reaction among many persons to the 'progressive' methods attributed to John Dewey. But certainly no one would want to return to the rigid methods used before Dewey's time. It might be well for us to teach both the student — and the subject," he said.

One-Woman Bureau Keeps Guests Happy for Hotel

By GAY PAULEY New York—Mrs. W. W. W. Allen, a grandmother in her 50's, is a one-woman sight-seeing bureau, shopping service, baby-sitter, adviser to the lover and a m. a. t. u. r. e. s. l. e. u. t. h.

She manages to combine all these in one job—as head of guest relations for the Hotel Commodore, located at a crossroads between Times Square and Grand Central Terminal.

On the job for 16 years, the gray-haired widow believes hers is a career unique in the hotel field. Her one assignment is to keep guests happy and make them want to stay at the same place on their next trip to the nation's largest city.

But accomplishing all this calls for tact and patience, plus a vast storehouse of information about New York's sights, its shops and its prices. During World War II, when servicemen by the thousands either stayed at the hotel or made its lobby their hangout, she located everything from misplaced dates to a de-scented skunk for a ship's mascot.

Helps Find Donkeys She's been asked to help a husband locate a black nightgown for his wife. A father once asked her to help him find donkeys as gifts for his twin boys; she recently found a yacht for rent for one well-heeled guest.

She has had guests at the hotel—and a few who later confessed they were staying at other hostels—call or come by to find where to shop for antiques, where to buy a colony of ants, whether she can get tickets for television shows—she can, but draws the line at locating theater tickets; to ask what clothes should be taken on an Alaskan trip; to ask about tipping customs in the big town.

"It's amazing how some people will unbend to a perfect stranger," she said. "I sometimes feel like a psychiatrist. I've had people ask me how to bring up teen-agers, whether to get a divorce, how to tolerate a mother-in-law."

Takes Cat To Game A woman who was obviously very fond of her traveling companion, once stopped by Mrs. Allen's desk in the lobby to inquire, "Am I permitted to take my cat to a baseball game?"

Said Mrs. Allen, "I later learned she took him . . . bought two tickets just to make sure both got in."

"Some of the questions come long distance," said the affable Mrs. Allen. "One woman called from the West Coast to ask what the weather would be like in New York in March."

"I told her, 'Madam, what you need is an almanac.'"

Not too many days ago, one well-dressed woman appeared at Mrs. Allen's desk, stared at her a few minutes, and then commented:

"So you're Mrs. Allen. Well thank goodness. My husband comes home talking about you every time he's been in New York."

"I was afraid you were young and blonde."

Said Mrs. Allen, "I told her if I had been what she thought, her husband wouldn't be coming home talking about me."

Couple Arrives For Visit Here

Mr. and Mrs. L. Fudge, Seattle, Wash., are New Year's guests at the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. F. Nordwick, 919 Reddy avenue. Mrs. Fudge and Mrs. Nordwick are sisters.

Last week end Mr. and Mrs. Robert Young and sons, Eric and Bradley, Roseburg, were guests in the Nordwick home. The boys attended the southern deanery acolyte's convention at St. Mark's Episcopal church. A delegation of about 15 acolytes from Roseburg attended the sessions.

Citrus Salad—Here's a grapefruit salad pretty enough for a party. Cut two medium grapefruit in halves. Remove pulp and cut into sections. Combine sections with 1/2 cup maraschino cherry halves (about 20 cherries), 3/4 cup each of chopped celery and flaked coconut, and 2 tablespoons dry sherry. Mix well, pile lightly into grapefruit halves and top with 1 cup cottage cheese.

Work and Married Women Subject For New Book

New York—The fact that she will live longer, and has completed her family earlier, has created a new problem for the modern mother.

That's according to "Work in the Lives of Married Women," just published by Columbia University Press.

Statistically, here are reasons behind the "new" problem:

-In 1900, the average American woman had a life expectancy of 64 years. Today, chances are that she still will be alive at 75.

-Fifty years ago, the average American mother had her last child at the age 32. And the "baby" didn't marry and leave home until about 10 years before the mother could be expected to die.

-Today, a mother has completed her family at age 26, and this youngest child enters first grade when Mom is 32, leaving her comparatively free to do as she wishes.

It adds up to the modern mother's dilemma: How can she use the next four decades of her life so that they will be of greatest benefit to her family and to herself?

The problem was discussed during the National Manpower Council's study of "Womanpower" last year. It is further explored by some of the nation's leading authorities in this new book.

According to the book, there are many reasons why a mother whose children no longer require her full-time care may choose to work.

Chief reason is her desire to help her husband provide a higher standard of living for the family.

According to Mrs. Katherine B. Oettinger, chief of the children's bureau of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, there should be no guilt complexes about mothers' working.

"It is not the amount of time spent with the child, but what happens during that time that really matters, so far as parent-child relations are concerned."

To turn leftover ham or turkey into a gourmet supper dish, prepare your favorite macaroni and cheese recipe using sauteur wine for part of the liquid. Add bits of cooked meat, top with thin slices tomato and cover with buttered crumbs. Bake until hot and browned.

Library Displays Doll Collection

A collection of dolls representing storybook characters and children of other lands has been placed on display in the junior department of the Medford Public Library, Jackson County library headquarters. Included in the exhibit are a wooden Pinocchio, a Chinese boy and girl, an American Indian woman with her baby, a Japanese maiden and a dancer from Hawaii. Each of the dolls will later play a part in exhibits of books about its own country.

The dolls now on display represent the entire collection owned by the library and have been contributed by members of the library staff. Additions to the family will be welcome at any time, according to Misses Cynthia McKay and Rosemary Stevenson of the library's junior department.

Library patrons are reminded that the exhibit case is available for group and hobby displays which can be tied in with books, so long as no commercial advertising is involved.
