Family Council

CECILE D.-I am a married woman, mother of four children. My own mother died a few months ago and my father came to live with us. I never anticipated any problems because we have a big house and Dad has a nice room all to himself. He works on and off and is in fair health, so things ought to go along pretty smoothly with us.

Well, the other day one of my cousins came to call and I learned from her that my father had been going to her with a long list of complaints against me, my husband and the children and the whole setup in our household. I was so furious that I said things I shouldn't have and told Dad to go elsewhere if he didn't like it with me. I wouldn't have minded if he had told me these things to my face.

Mr. L. R. - I certainly will look for a place of my own because I realize now that Cecile never really wanted me in her home in the first place.

I told her many times about some of the things that were bothering me and she never paid any attention. I told her that the kids make noise right outside my door in the morning when I want to sleep. Sometimes I can't sleep all night and I need that sleep in the morning. Cecile told the kids to be quieter, but not in a way that made them pay any attention.

There have been dozens of little things like that. I realize that I'm just an extra burden in Cecile's home and I have no right to special consideration, but I did think I would get a little respect because of my age-nearly 74.

THE COUNCIL: If Cecile realized all the positive physical and mental benefit her father derived from the heart-to-heart complaining talk to his nephews, she might take a somewhat more tolerant attitude. Admittedly, her father did wrong. But his most serious mistake was in his selection of a listener. It is not to his discredit that he suffers, like many widowed elderly persons, from a sense of being unneeded and unwanted. Doctors would say that Mr. R. did the healthy thing to "talk his heart out." Such gabs relieve a lot of inner tension.

It is quite possible that Cecile herself needs such a gab fest with someone. We suspect that she has quite a bit of bottled up tensions over conditions in her home. Even under the best of circumstances, elderly men and women are often trying. Busy active individuals like Cecile have little inclination to cope with the often demanding childishness of aging parents. It is likely that Cecile has been building up some resentment against having to deal with her father.

On the other hand, it is also likely that Cecile would feel very guilty if she did not provide a home for her father. She must, therefore, weigh one thing against another and make up her mind to do the best with her decision.

If it is decided that Mr. R. remains with Cecile, she should try to be more accepting of the job she has undertaken. Making a home for an elderly person means more than providing him with a room. Some understanding must be offered without submitting to the tendency of the aged to use weakness as a weapon to tyrannize.
