PREFERS ONE ROLE
Hollywood—UPI—Robert Taylor is one actor who does not want to become an independent producer like Marlon Brando, Burt Lancaster and Kirk Douglas. ## Oklahoma's Integration Plan To Go Unchanged by Governor

By CARTER W. BRADLEY
United Press International

Oklahoma City—UPI—Oklahoma's successful plan for integration of its public schools will continue without change when a new governor takes office Jan. 12.

In fact, the subject has never been a major political issue in this state, despite the uproar so close at hand in Arkansas.

Gov-elect Howard Edmondson told United Press International he will make no recommendations for revising the state school aid regulations which form the basis of Oklahoma's gradual program of compliance with the 1954 Supreme court decision against segregation.

Great Accomplishment
Outgoing Gov. Raymond Gary said in an interview he considers the peaceful integration of Oklahoma schools to be the greatest accomplishment on grounds that the governor's attitude set a pattern for all Oklahoma to follow.

Gary, under the law, could not succeed himself. Edmondson and the 15 other candidates who fought to replace him avoided the racial issue entirely. Hodge was unopposed for the Democratic nomination to his fourth term, and defeated his Republican opponent without segregation even being mentioned.

In 1955, the State Board of Education, which includes Hodge and six members appointed by the governor, voted five to one in favor of regulations penalizing school districts maintaining separate facilities for Negroes.

These regulations took effect in January, 1956.

Could Slow Program
Hodge said Gary "could have made our job 100 times as hard" if he had tried to block or slow down the integration program.

Gary, a former school teacher in southern Oklahoma, where Southern traditions are strongest, said Oklahomans "adopted a Christian attitude" which ruled out segregation as a political issue. He also pointed out that technical changes in the method of allocating state funds to schools usually meant higher salaries for teachers whose institutions did integrate.

Hodge said the board members got a few irate telephone calls after they issued a statement in July, 1955, that they would attempt to comply with the Supreme court ruling. They also received anxious inquiries from school officials in the so-called "little Dixie" counties of southeastern Oklahoma.

"We had our fingers crossed," Hodge said. "One important politician could have spouted off on this subject and caused us all sorts of trouble. But it didn't happen."

Hodge said only 20 school systems in Oklahoma have not yet started mixing white and Negro students at the high school level. A total of 190 high schools have integrated, and 168 elementary schools are complying with the high court decision.

No Negro Students
"Of course, it should be pointed out," Hodge said, "that many Oklahoma school districts have no Negro residents, and our racial problem has never been on a par with the so-called Deep South states."

Gary said the state legislature could have interfered in the matter but didn't. He said he had talked with several lawmakers who doubted that their constituents would go along with his administration's approach, but had sold them on it.

The National Association for Advancement of Colored People made Oklahoma a racial battleground in 1946 by seeking the admission of a Negro to the state university at Norman. After a three-year court battle, the NAACP won. The university no longer keeps a record of students by racial groups, officials say, and several dozen Negroes are enrolled.

The NAACP waged a campaign last summer to force downtown restaurants in Oklahoma City to serve Negroes.

SMALL CONGREGATION
Hudson, Mass.—UPI—The Union Church of All Faiths has been enlarged. Originally it measured 5 by 8 feet. Now it is 5 by 11 feet. The Rev. Louis W. West, the Baptist minister who built it himself, says the church now seats four instead of two parishioners.

COSTLY METERS
Syracuse, N.Y.—UPI—Parking meters on one street of Syracuse are costing the city money. Within a 10-day period, eight meters were broken and rifled. Traffic engineer W. Frank Kavanaugh estimated the cost of repairing each meter at $12.

NCAA Tutors Seek Return Of Posts to Goal Line

Cincinnati, Ohio—UPI—Delegates to the NCAA convention began business sessions today with tightening of eligibility rules for athletes the hottest topic on the agenda.

The proposed legislation could give the National Collegiate Athletic Association the power to rule over the eligibility of any athlete attending member schools.

This and other top agenda matters, including an increase in the NCAA policy making group's powers, will be voted on Friday.

Recommendations by the American College Football Coaches association, one of several allied groups meeting concurrently, drew top attention as the preliminaries wound up.

The football coaches went on record as favoring a return of goal posts to the goal line and a liberalization of the limited substitution rules.
