

Snow Time

Snow-capped peaks and snow-capped trees provide myriad scenes to attract photographers at Crater lake. Peter Britt, pioneer lensman, took the first pictures of the lake in 1874, packing in all the heavy equipment necessary then. Today, all one needs is a modern camera and tire chains—and an eye for Nature's fine points as well as her grandeur.

Flying down the hill on a pair of skis is a sport that calls for the use of every faculty, for the slightest misjudgment can mean an end-over-end tumble. Learning how to ski at an early age, like the youngster in the picture above, is an advantage, but even an expert is not immune to winding up in a heap in a snow bank . . . it's all part of the fun.

To youngsters, snow means fun. Though little fingers get numb and noses run, the intrigue of the white fluffy stuff is so great that hardships are overlooked. Above, Duane and Tommy Barker, sons of Mr. and Mrs. D. M. Barker, Medford, find delight in a ride on a "flying saucer."
