Pro Rules Adoption Argued

San Francisco—(UPI)—The controversial issue of whether colleges should adopt professional basketball rules raged with coaches Red Auerbach and Phil Woolpert taking to the stump.

Auerbach, coach of the junketing Boston Celtics of the National Basketball association, declared in Seattle that the colleges should adopt some version of the professional rules.

Woolpert, an avowed disciple of defense who coaches the University of San Francisco, said in San Francisco that the pros would be better off if they played the college rules.

Auerbach blasted the "monotonous type of ball control many coaches teach. Woolpert said that pro basketball is a "prostituted version of the game."

Both coaches gave their views without knowing what the other had said.

Under the professional rules, a team has to take a shot within 24 seconds after getting the ball or lose it; a game is broken down into four 12-minute quarters; the zone defense is barred and a player is allowed six personal fouls.

"When the zone defense is prohibited the game loses one of its prime functions," Woolpert said. "And they don't need to play that extra eight minutes."

Woolpert added that Bill Russell, his USF star who now is with the Celtics "looked drawn" when the Celtics were playing the Lakers here Sunday night.

"If you saw some strategy out there Sunday, I sure didn't," Woolpert said. "The pros simply aren't allowed to employ any because of the rules."

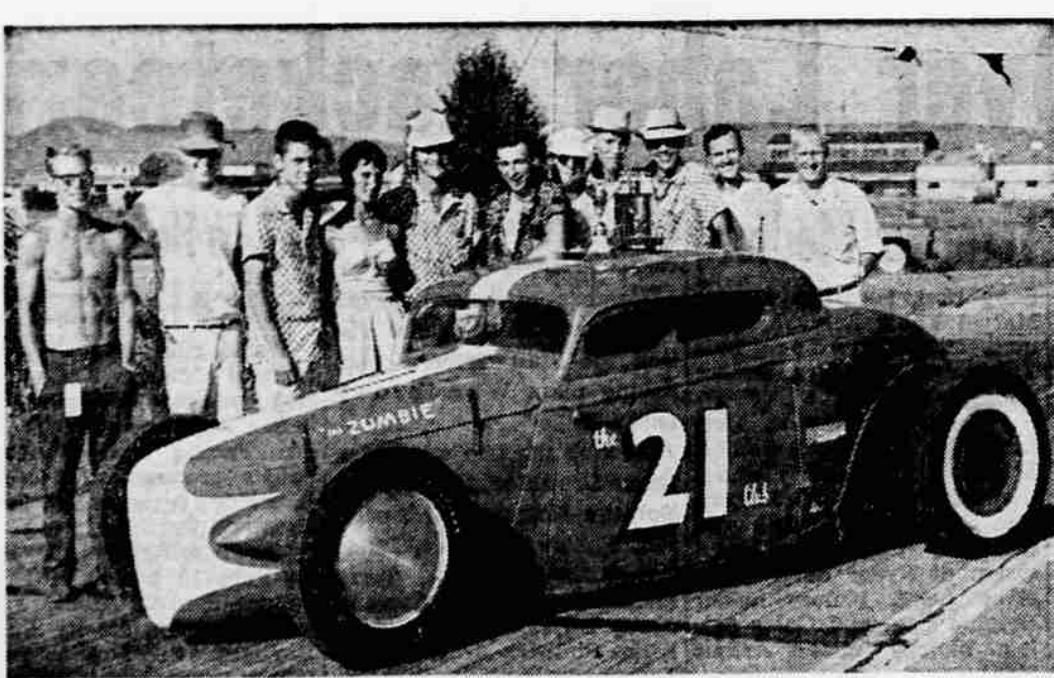

"We put on a basketball show with the finest players in the country," Auerbach said. "The fans see 48 minutes of continuous basketball."

"I thought it was absurd basketball to see a man shoot with nobody under the basket to handle the rebounds," Woolpert said. "I think that sort of an exhibition is a prostituted version of the game."

Southern Oregon Timing association will be a co-sponsor of the Autorama, according to Manager Mike Batnich, Grants Pass. Earl Blaik Quits Army

Glenn Davis, Earl Blaik's greatest player, and Eddie Erdelatz, his greatest rival, paid equal tribute today to the retiring Army football coach. Blaik has resigned, effective Feb. 15, and plans to quit coaching for good.

"I've always thought a great deal of him as a coach and as a person," said all-American halfback Davis in Los Angeles. "The Army certainly is going to miss him."

"Not only West Point but all of football will miss Red Blaik," said Erdelatz, whose Navy teams held a 5-3 edge over Blaik's Army teams. "Blaik contributed much to the game and to the boys who played under him. He also did a fine job for the service by helping turn out fine officers as well as athletes."
