The Family Council

Editor's note: The Family Council consists of a judge, a psychiatrist, three clergymen, a newspaper editor, a women's editor and two writers. Each article is a summary of an actual report. The Family Council does not give advice; it merely reports on problems that have been dealt with by responsible agencies and counselors.

Julius J.—My wife and I are in our mid-30s and have been married 10 years. Enid was a widow with a 2-year-old son when I married her.

We now have three children of my own and I adopted the little boy, Lenny, whom I love like my own. I would do anything in the world for him, but in spite of this he has been a source of trouble in our marriage. I want him to look on me as his own father and Enid thinks he ought to know and remember his real father.

I feel that Lenny is much too young for so much confusion. Already he talks back to me saying, "You can't tell me. You aren't my real father." I feel like falling through the floor when he talks like that. Enid encourages it by pressing a close attachment between him and his father's parents.

Enid J.—When my husband died I promised his parents that whatever I did about my future I would keep their son's memory alive in Lenny. Lenny's father was their only son and it means everything to them to have him know all about his father. They objected to my husband's legally adopting Lenny, but for many reasons I thought it would be best.

I have tried to make it up to them by letting them be as close to the boy as if his father were alive. It seems only fair. They love him so much. He's all they have left of their son.

Julius doesn't seem to understand that Lenny really loves him like a father. It's only when he gets angry that he talks like that. He doesn't mean it and is always sorry afterwards. Every night when he says his prayers he remembers both his fathers.

The Council: Julius should be aware that when they feel hurt or angry many children fantasize that their parents are step-parents. Some like to imagine they were stolen by the gypsies and sold to their present parents, or that they were adopted.

If they have something real to go on as Lenny has, this fantasy is encouraged. But as long as the relationship with their everyday parents is reasonably happy, they get over it quickly.

It would not be right to withhold the information about his real father from Lenny. It is a fact that he must live with and Julius must live with. Julius must try to avoid taking the boy's back talk too seriously. His own children will probably give him some back talk at one time or another and he can't let it get under his skin. It's an almost inevitable part of rearing a youngster. Julius should try to take Lenny's variety of back talk as he would that of his own children. He should try not to be hurt or intimidated by it.

On the other hand, we think it quite possible that there has been a bit too much emphasis on Lenny's real father in this family. He can and should enjoy the warmth and love of his relationship
