President Plans To Hunt Quail

Thomastown, Ga.—(UPI)—President Eisenhower hoped to go gunning for south Georgia quail today with an end to the monsoon-like weather that marred his arrival late Wednesday.

Torrential rains forced the President's plane into an alternate landing field after a bumpy ride from Washington. Eisenhower then had to motor 67 miles through the rain to reach the milestone plantation of former Treasury Secretary George M. Humphrey, outside Thomastown.

Once inside his comfortable guest cottage, the President spent the evening playing bridge with friends while keeping tabs on weather reports which were to govern today's activities.

The forecast was for clearing weather today with the temperature about 60, but a drop to near freezing was expected tonight. The clearing weather and colder temperatures will be ideal for quail hunting.

Heart Attack Is Fatal to Driver

Fred Daniel Adams, 80, of 520 West Second st., died this morning at the wheel of his car, apparently of a heart attack, Medford police reported.

Police said Adams had driven around the block from his home after a neighbor started the car for him by pushing it. He lost control in front of 704 West Second st., ran over the sidewalk, through a fence and struck the house of Dorothy May Stone, 626 West Second st., according to the report.

She told police she saw he was having some sort of attack and told him to remain quiet while she summoned help.

But Adams, according to the investigating officer, backed away, went back onto the street and continued driving west at a slow pace.

He attempted to turn north on Oak st., the officer reported, but again his vehicle left the street, crossed a sidewalk and this time struck a tree in his own yard.

The officer said Adams was dead when he reached the scene.

Funeral arrangements are to be announced by Chapel Mortuary.
