

Operating Budget Of $298,351,000 Told by Hatfield

These recommended adjustments, the governor pointed out, provide for a total operating budget of $298,351,000.

In discussing the building program the governor said six agencies requested $35 million from the general fund while his predecessor recommended only $2,495,000 for three of these agencies.

Hatfield recommended $7 million for the system of higher education to permit construction in the next two and one half years of classroom buildings at Portland State; science building additions at the University of Oregon and Oregon State college; medical research buildings at the medical school in Portland and heating plant additions at Oregon College of Education and at Oregon State.

Priorities of the Board of Higher Education, he said, suggest projects at Eastern Oregon and the University of Oregon medical school, deserve early attention.

Fairview Home Funds
The governor recommended $5,128,000 to cover costs of the Board of Control building program.

This is in contrast to $344,000 in the printed budget for new buildings for the state institutions.

He would allow $842,000 for Fairview home to provide two inmate buildings, a new water tank and an additional boiler.

Other recommendations include $199,000 for maintenance shops and heating plant expansion at the Oregon Deaf school and $2 million for essential portions of phase three at the new correctional institution in Salem.

Also recommended was $40,000 for planning for the next development of Dammasch State hospital near Wilsonville.

Hatfield urged the legislature to authorize the start of a separate women's prison by providing $567,000 for the first wing of a separate prison for 60 women.

Property Acquisition
His revised budget includes $500,000 for acquisition of property in the Capitol Mall and $600,000 for necessary utility extensions for buildings in the Mall area.

As the first step in the construction of a new Supreme court building, Hatfield suggested a national architectural competition for the design of the new court building, which is destined to go into the Mall.

He said this was the manner in which plans were obtained for Oregon's state capital building.

Hatfield's total general fund building program aggregated $14,621,000. He pointed out that federal funds in excess of $1,900,000 will be added to this sum and the Board of Higher Education will be adding another $9,405,000 in buildings such as dormitories, which are self-liquidating.

"I have recommended a building program which we can support and one which we need," Hatfield concluded.

Agents Tell How to Kill Moss in Lawn
Moss in the lawn may indicate any one or more of several things, most important being lack of soil fertility, according to county extension agents. Others are too much shade, a very acid soil and soil compaction. Maintaining an adequate fertilizer program is essential, it was explained. An application of 75 to 100 lbs. of lime per 1000 sq. ft. will solve most acid soil conditions.

Moss in the lawn can be killed either by raking it out by hand, heavy ammonium sulfate application of 8 to 10 pounds per 1,000 square feet, copper sulfate spray of five ounces in three or four gallons of water per 1,000 square feet, or a commercial moss killer to be used according to directions on label.

The agents explained that the ammonium sulfate application should not be watered after applying. They said that it will burn out the moss and that the grass will recover from any burns.
