

Hatfield Sees Need To Erase Oregon Misconceptions

Editor's note: This is the last of a series of Oregon Centennial dispatches written exclusively for UPI.

Oregon's Centennial, beginning with the statehood observance Saturday and renewed with the 100-day Exposition and Trade Fair on June 10, can do much to erase misconceptions about our wonderful state.

As those who have come to reside with us from other areas can testify, and as those of us who are native who have traveled elsewhere can testify, there are prevalent several myths about Oregon which have possibly impeded our attraction for tourists, industry, and potential residents.

Statistics do not correspond, for instance, to the widespread thinking that we sustain a rainfall here that makes for other than pleasant living. We actually have a climate that has an admirable variety, beautifully seasonal, and an invigoration that lends zest to the people. Perhaps skeptics will accept our world-wide invitation to come visit us and as a result they will want to locate here.

Mistaken Ideas
While the mistaken idea of Oregon retaining a wild west atmosphere probably contributes to some tourist trade, there are those who hesitate to come here because they are certain we do not have modern cities, first-class transportation, or other 20th century conveniences and accommodations. A looksee might help dissolve this illusion.

There are some other misconceptions some mid-westerners, easterners and southerners have about our great Northwest. They could be set forth at some length.

But turning to the positive, it is my hope we may as individuals promote individual visits here by a "write them, invite them" campaign, as it were, from Oregon residents to friends in other states, territories, nations. These personal invitations would be a most desirable companion for the advertising and promotion campaign upon which we are embarking.

Be Hospitable
The natural follow-up on our part will be to serve as hospitable hosts during the Centennial fair. The friendly service station operator, the reception by the taxi driver, the response of those who man the desks at air, rail and bus terminals can do much to provide a favorable reaction among those who visit here for pleasure and business.

Oregon's Centennial belongs to no county. It belongs to no commission. It belongs to no government official.

It has as its purpose the cultural, educational and entertainment uplifting of our people. In this spirit we mark the birthday of statehood Saturday, throughout the state, culminating in the 100-day Exposition and Trade Fair beginning June 10.

The State Legislature, as spokesman for the people of Oregon, has set aside party differences to send the Centennial on its way with a unanimous endorsement. The vice president is to be with us as the representative of the United States government Saturday. Let's make sure Oregon never looked better. We have much to offer. This opportunity will not pass our way again in our lifetime.
