Family Council

Victor S.—He's wasting his time.

Warren K.—She'll have me in the end.

Victor S.—I am a happily married man trying to help a bachelor friend who seems determined to make life hard for himself.

Warren is 32 years old and has been courting the same girl for the past five years. Betty is an extremely attractive girl, but in my opinion she is more than a little nuts. She just doesn't know what she wants. She blows hot and cold. One week she treats Warren as though she's crazy about him. The next week she treats him like dirt.

I have been trying to convince Warren that he is wasting his time. The worst thing that could happen to him is to have Betty accept him. Plenty of attractive girls could be seriously interested in Warren if he'd get over his obsession about Betty.

Warren K.—The way I look at it, Betty is really just a spoiled kid, but eventually she'll grow up and be a worthwhile person. She was only 20 when I first met her, and she is still young enough to change a lot.

It seems to me that Betty just happens to be too appealing for her own good. A lot of guys go for her and they turn her head. In my opinion none of them really cares for her as I do. They just like to be seen with a sexy looking doll. Some of these men have looks and money, and it's natural for a young girl to become confused by it all.

I feel that I really love Betty—almost in spite of her looks. Underneath she is sincere and warm-hearted. If I'm patient, I'm sure she'll have me in the end.

...The Council—Far be it from me to argue with true love. If Betty's warm heart and good sense triumph she may be able to appreciate it. However, we're not so sure that Victor isn't right when he feels that Betty's acceptance is the worst thing that could happen to Warren.

It is true that physically attractive women and men run into certain special problems. They get a lot of attention—much of it quite cheap and synthetic. But if their personality and character development is sound, they will slough off this kind of attention. They will gravitate naturally toward others who are sincere, interesting and kind and will never turn against a friend and treat him "like dirt."

Attractive women and men who use their beauty as a means to power and who enjoy the spectacle of others fighting for their favor are at heart as insecure and fearful as the homely individual who hides from others. Beauty is a bonus that an unselfish person is happy to give to someone he loves. Usually he makes light of it and is more interested in others than in their reaction to him.

So we think that Betty's "warm heart" is probably covered with layers of such ugliness as egotism and fear and dislike of both men and women. She may finally decide that it would be to her advantage to accept Warren, but we doubt very much whether her feelings have much depth or staying power. (Copyright 1959, General Features Corp.)
