Rebel Convicts Soak Hostages In Gasoline

Walpole, Mass. —(UPI)— State Troopers firing machine guns stormed a building at Walpole State Prison yesterday and saved seven gasoline-drenched and bound hostages, including the warden and chaplain, who were held by six rebel convicts.

The mutineers, desperate men who said they didn't care whether they lived or died, threatened to turn the hostages into human torches after they had failed in an attempt to escape over the wall.

The prisoners had seized the hostages after a quick-thinking guard thwarted their escape and risked injury by toppling a ladder they had set up against a wall. The guard, being held as a hostage, was on the ladder and he pulled it down with him when he jumped.

Some fifty state policemen ringed the prison machine shop, where the hostages were held, and on a silent signal about 25 of them leaped through windows, grabbing prisoners and machine gunning down the door so that other troopers could enter.

The mutineers had poured gasoline over the hostages who included the Catholic chaplain, the Rev. Edward F. Hartigan, Warden John A. Gavin, two deputy wardens, two guards and a prison store keeper.

The hostages' hands were bound with wire and a wire noose was fitted tightly around their necks. Gasoline had been poured over their heads, down their backs and into their pockets. Warden Gavin was burned on the neck from the gasoline.

Martin F. Feeney, 43, of Boston, seven-time escapee, was the ringleader of the rebels who bargained for their freedom right up to the time of the police assault.

Out of 105 appropriation bills, the House has passed 39 of which the Senate has approved 28. This leaves 66 bills to be processed by the joint ways and means committee.

Small Department
With the exception of the appropriation for the Oregon Centennial and a bill for legislative expenses, all appropriation bills acted on thus far have been for comparatively small departments.

No other large money bills have been reported out of subcommittee for action by the main committee.

Senate committees have killed 27 Senate bills, two Senate joint resolutions and one House concurrent resolution.

Of the 1,152 bills introduced...

duced, a total of 528 have either been passed or tabled, leaving 624 left for disposal. A good many of these were expected to die in committee.

Legislative Counsel Sam Haley, who writes bills for the legislators, said he still has more than 300 requests for bills.
