Swap 'em!

Nat Bradford

Old and young like to play this French version of Blind Man's Buff. IT is blindfolded in the center of a large circle of chairs. Each player in a chair is numbered—one, two, three, and up. The blindfolded IT calls "Swap 'Em—one and three!" (naming any two numbers). These players must somehow by dashing, creeping, stooping, etc., change places with each other. IT tries to catch one of them or take an empty chair. No one can play outside the circle of chairs. But what a good time everyone has!

Kiss the Blarney Stone Eileen Daly

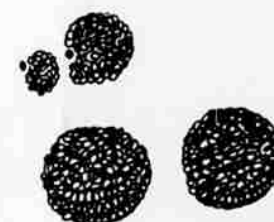

Kissing the magic Blarney Stone gives you the gift of flattery. Pretend a large button is the Blarney Stone; tie it to a string and hang it from the ceiling or in a doorway. Write prophecies for each player that say, perhaps, "You're going to be star catcher of the Yanks," or "Television needs you!" or "You'll win the Ladies' High Jump in '59!" Hand these out. Blindfold the first player, turn him around twice and tell him to find the Stone and press it to his forehead. Then he must touch another player. Now he removes his blindfold and reads his prophecy to that person he touched who is the next to try to "kiss" the Blarney Stone and win the power of flattery. After you've performed, drop out, so each child can have a turn.

Let's Draw a Poodle

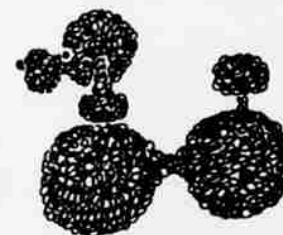

Ann Davidow

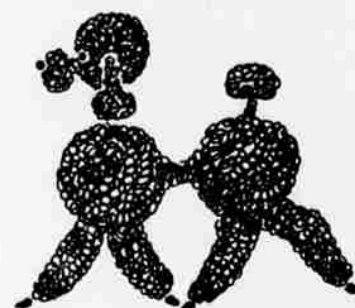

Balls of scribble (like a doodle)
Can become a curly poodle.

Make your poodle-doodle puffy (Poodles are extremely fluffy).

Here and there they look quite slim (Where the dog beauticians trim).

Poodles, full of fun and pomp,
Are always ready for a romp!
