

People May Again Get Chance To Vote Legislative Pay Hike

Salem—(UPI)—Voters of Oregon again will be given an opportunity of increasing the pay of state legislators if a Senate joint resolution amending the state constitution is adopted by the Legislature.

Two Republicans and two Democrats introduced the bill Wednesday.

It would increase legislative pay from $600 to $1,200 a year.

Authority also would be granted for legislators to collect 10 cents a mile to and from their homes from the state capital once each week during the legislative session.

Oregon voters have refused on numerous occasions in recent years to increase legislative pay, the last time at the November elections.

Tax Exemption

A second bill introduced would give persons 65 years or older with an income of not more than $2,500 a year, a tax exemption on property. The exemption would be $5,000 for the eligible householder.

Outlawing business combinations, pools and trusts in Oregon is provided in a bill sent to the Senate desk by Sen. Jean Lewis (D-Portland).

Penalties for violations of the proposed law are included in the bill draft.

A bill described by Sen. Lewis as a "poor little bill trying to do a good job" was passed by a unanimous vote.

The bill would make abandonment of a dog or cat in Oregon a misdemeanor.

Most of the Senate oratory was focused on a bill revising sections of the state agriculture code, which the Legislature passed with five dissenting votes.

Sen. Ben Musa (D-The Dalles) objected to one provision which empowered the Agriculture Department to invoke liens on property of persons delinquent in bills due the department.

Farmers Said Kicked

"I think that the administrative arm of this government is kicking the farmers in the teeth," Musa said. "This kind of legislation giving administrators power of eminent domain, the right to slap liens on property, is all wrong, and certainly was not contemplated by the framers of our state constitution."

Sen. Alfred Corbett (D-Portland), who carried the bill on the floor, said the Department already has the power to invoke liens, but has used it very little and only in extreme cases.

Unanimous approval has been given by a measure calling for establishment of Oct. 31 as "Youth Honor Day" in Oregon by the House Planning and Development Committee.

The measure, sponsored by Sen. Francis Ziegler (R-Corvallis), now goes to the House for final vote.

NO COWBOY MOOD

San Diego, Calif.—(UPI)—Mrs. Earl Rhodes, 65, who grabbed a gun and chased two would-be robbers from her store Wednesday told police they were wearing Western-style bandanas as masks.

"I just wasn't in the mood to play cowboy," she said.

City Driving Can Be Pleasant, Chief Notes

Traffic congestion would be alleviated and city driving made more pleasant if drivers would pay closer heed to traffic signs, signals and pavement markings, Medford Police Chief Charles P. Champlin said today.

Champlin said obeying signs is just as important in rural areas as inside a city, but that failure to obey inside a city more often results in accidents because of traffic volume.

Figures provided by the state department of motor vehicles indicate that failure to stop at a stop sign results in several thousand accidents annually.

Housing Regulations For Migrant Groups Debated in House

Salem—(UPI)—Arguments both for and against a bill proposing regulations of better housing for migrant laborers and their families marked a day-long hearing before the House Labor and Industries Committee Wednesday.

A group of growers of agricultural products from eastern Oregon and the Willamette valley opposed the bill, contending that because of varying conditions in different sections of the state, a universal law was impossible.

On the other hand, members of the Oregon Council of Migrant Labor and the Unemployment Compensation Commission urged passage of the bill.

R. W. Ahrens, representing the Oregon Farm Bureau, also opposed passage of the bill in its present form. Ahrens had a long list of proposed amendments, but the hearing time was so brief, he did not have a chance to present them.

Promised Opportunity

Rep. Grace Peck, chairman, promised the opponents of the bill (HB 159) another opportunity to be heard at a future date. A bill allowing five days pay for public employees who are called upon by law enforcement agencies to serve in mountain rescue operations was adopted and sent to the Senate.

The bill was presented on the floor by Rep. Norman Howard (D-Portland).

The Oregon House passed a memorial urging the Legislatures of Idaho and Washington to join in a reciprocal agreement covering workmen's compensation for men temporarily employed in any one of the states.

California and Nevada already have such agreements.

Rep. W. O. Kelsay (D-Roseburg) explained the agreement would clarify who would pay if out-of-state men were injured while employed on dam projects on the Columbia and Snake rivers.

Several bills dealing with fish were introduced at the request of the State Fish Commission.

Would Raise Fees

One bill would increase from $1 to $5 license fees for retail dealers of packaged frozen food fish or frozen shellfish.

Another would increase license fees from $37.50 to $75 for a cannery to can shellfish. This new license would be in conformity with other food fish cannery license fees.

Still another bill would eliminate the requirement that an additional license be obtained for commercial salmon trolling if the line contains more than 12 hooks.

The House Planning and Development Committee has set a public hearing next Tuesday to hear arguments on the proposed daylight saving time measure.

The hearing will start at 1 p.m. at the statehouse.

The best temperature for African violets is 70 to 72 degrees.

Porter Highly Regarded in Venezuela, Reporter Finds on So. American Trip

By A. ROBERT SMITH

Mail Tribune

Washington Correspondent

Editor's Note: Our Washington correspondent went to Caracas just after a visit there by Rep. Charles O. Porter (D-Ore.) to assess the effect of Porter's Latin American politicking on U.S.-Latin American relations.

Caracas, Venezuela—(Special)—As this leading South American country struggles back upon the road to democratic self-government, often blocked in the past by military coups, many of its political leaders are looking for moral support from friends throughout the hemisphere.

One of their valued friends, one quickly finds, is Rep. Charles O. Porter, who has for two years been conducting almost a one-man campaign in Congress against the sort of Latin dictator Venezuela has only so recently been ousted a year ago, and last week Venezuela inaugurated its newly elected president, Romulo Betancourt.

Congressman Porter came down here last week to wish the new government well. Venezuela invited Congress to send the customary delegation to the inauguration.

Porter was the only congressman who went. To conclude, after many interviews, that Porter has had a beneficial effect on the attitude of Venezuelans toward the United States since Vice President Nixon was stoned here last summer seems undisputed.

Few 'Good Americans'

An American newspaperman who has been here 25 years told me that Venezuelans tend to regard U.S. public figures as either "good" or "bad" Americans. He said about the only "good Americans" in their minds today are Porter, Gov. Nelson Rockefeller of New York and Herbert Mathews, a veteran New York Times writer who was given a "Good Neighbor" trophy here last week end by President Betancourt.

"That's an improvement," the newspaperman said, "because not long ago they thought all Americans were bad."

A Venezuelan born here, educated at Columbia University and a longtime resident of New York before returning here, said substantially the same thing.

"There is a great man," he said of Porter.

Porter became such a figure in the minds of Venezuelans starting with his crusade against Dominican Republic Gen. Rafael Trujillo, who is despised here; his criticism of the U.S. giving military aid to Latin dictators, including Perez Jimenez; his coming here after the Nixon incident last summer and again last week to bolster democratic elements and assure Venezuelans that Americans are friendly toward them and are pro-democracy and anti-dictatorship, whatever State Department policy might indicate to the contrary.

Porter, in a word, is one of the only American officials, among numerous other leaders in this hemisphere (such as Jose Figueras of Costa Rica and Gov. Munoz Marin of Puerto Rico), who has lent open support to democratic forces in this rich oil producing country where military dictatorships have been the rule and not the exception.

Porter is interfering in the internal affairs of Venezuela," Machado told me resentfully when asked what he thought of Porter's remarks here a few days before.

The Oregon congressman had criticized local Communists for trying to represent their party as just a nationalistic movement without ties with Russia. The Caracas Daily Journal reported Porter told a press conference:

"If a man is a Communist, unless he doesn't know better, he must put the Soviet Union first. I don't see how anyone who believes in liberty can believe in Communism when he sees how the satellites such as Hungary are treated."

In his inaugural address, President Betancourt, who himself was a Communist briefly as a youth some 30 years ago, said much the same thing as Porter and reiterated that his new coalition government had no room for Communists. He was roundly applauded by the new Congress, whose members jammed into the Senate chamber with other dignitaries to hear him.

This offered a strong rebuttal to those U.S. congressmen who have in recent years claimed the U.S. should back Latin dictators, such as Trujillo and Perez Jimenez, on grounds they were needed as bastions of anti-communism.

Tide Said Turning

Porter also suggested in public statements here that he thinks the tide is running against dictatorship throughout the hemisphere. He predicted Trujillo will fall before the year is out. He said Dominican rebels are obtaining arms and are organizing within and outside Santo Domingo.

In contrast to Porter's statements here, Thomas E. Dewey, head of the delegation sent to the inauguration by President Eisenhower, ducked all political questions. In a real way, Dewey personified the administration's oft-expressed Latin American policy of showing no partiality for either democracies or dictatorships.

The latest administration expression of Latin American policy, by Milton Eisenhower after a trip through Central America, reiterated what Porter, first, and Nixon, second, had said—that we ought to give Latin democracies an embrace and give dictators only a cold, formal handshake, thus leaving no doubt in this hemisphere which form of government our sympathies lie with.

A Venezuelan said his people can see little sign that this new policy is being implemented. He said they think only a change of administration in Washington will do it.

This helps to explain Porter's hero status in Latin America. He stands almost alone among Washington officials in embracing popular Latin democratic leaders, offering them verbal and moral support, shunning the dictators and consulting with exiled foes of the dictators about ways and means of undermining the despots' political strength.

There are several skilled diplomats on the U.S. embassy staff here who are well received by Venezuelans and display their preference for democratic processes. But one stumbles easily across an example of harmfully, bumbling staffing, as depicted in the best-seller, "The Ugly American." At a reception at Ambassador Edward Sparks' home on inauguration night, one U.S. military attaché was sounding off loudly that Venezuela would be better off under a dictatorship. Some guests were shocked to find this sort of "military mind" assigned to any diplomatic post, much less in a country where military officers have often needed little encouragement to grab the reins of power.

As long as the State Department doesn't implement Milton Eisenhower's policy proposals more vividly, Congressman Porter will undoubtedly continue to be regarded as a big man and much-needed friend in this part of the hemisphere where

Latin Americans are sensitive to the impression that most North Americans haven't much cared whether their struggle for liberty succeeded or not.

There are several skilled diplomats on the U.S. embassy staff here who are well received by Venezuelans and display their preference for democratic processes. But one stumbles easily across an example of harmfully, bumbling staffing, as depicted in the best-seller, "The Ugly American." At a reception at Ambassador Edward Sparks' home on inauguration night, one U.S. military attaché was sounding off loudly that Venezuela would be better off under a dictatorship. Some guests were shocked to find this sort of "military mind" assigned to any diplomatic post, much less in a country where military officers have often needed little encouragement to grab the reins of power.

As long as the State Department doesn't implement Milton Eisenhower's policy proposals more vividly, Congressman Porter will undoubtedly continue to be regarded as a big man and much-needed friend in this part of the hemisphere where

Latin Americans are sensitive to the impression that most North Americans haven't much cared whether their struggle for liberty succeeded or not.

There are several skilled diplomats on the U.S. embassy staff here who are well received by Venezuelans and display their preference for democratic processes. But one stumbles easily across an example of harmfully, bumbling staffing, as depicted in the best-seller, "The Ugly American." At a reception at Ambassador Edward Sparks' home on inauguration night, one U.S. military attaché was sounding off loudly that Venezuela would be better off under a dictatorship. Some guests were shocked to find this sort of "military mind" assigned to any diplomatic post, much less in a country where military officers have often needed little encouragement to grab the reins of power.

As long as the State Department doesn't implement Milton Eisenhower's policy proposals more vividly, Congressman Porter will undoubtedly continue to be regarded as a big man and much-needed friend in this part of the hemisphere where

Latin Americans are sensitive to the impression that most North Americans haven't much cared whether their struggle for liberty succeeded or not.

There are several skilled diplomats on the U.S. embassy staff here who are well received by Venezuelans and display their preference for democratic processes. But one stumbles easily across an example of harmfully, bumbling staffing, as depicted in the best-seller, "The Ugly American." At a reception at Ambassador Edward Sparks' home on inauguration night, one U.S. military attaché was sounding off loudly that Venezuela would be better off under a dictatorship. Some guests were shocked to find this sort of "military mind" assigned to any diplomatic post, much less in a country where military officers have often needed little encouragement to grab the reins of power.

As long as the State Department doesn't implement Milton Eisenhower's policy proposals more vividly, Congressman Porter will undoubtedly continue to be regarded as a big man and much-needed friend in this part of the hemisphere where

Latin Americans are sensitive to the impression that most North Americans haven't much cared whether their struggle for liberty succeeded or not.

There are several skilled diplomats on the U.S. embassy staff here who are well received by Venezuelans and display their preference for democratic processes. But one stumbles easily across an example of harmfully, bumbling staffing, as depicted in the best-seller, "The Ugly American." At a reception at Ambassador Edward Sparks' home on inauguration night, one U.S. military attaché was sounding off loudly that Venezuela would be better off under a dictatorship. Some guests were shocked to find this sort of "military mind" assigned to any diplomatic post, much less in a country where military officers have often needed little encouragement to grab the reins of power.

As long as the State Department doesn't implement Milton Eisenhower's policy proposals more vividly, Congressman Porter will undoubtedly continue to be regarded as a big man and much-needed friend in this part of the hemisphere where

Latin Americans are sensitive to the impression that most North Americans haven't much cared whether their struggle for liberty succeeded or not.

There are several skilled diplomats on the U.S. embassy staff here who are well received by Venezuelans and display their preference for democratic processes. But one stumbles easily across an example of harmfully, bumbling staffing, as depicted in the best-seller, "The Ugly American." At a reception at Ambassador Edward Sparks' home on inauguration night, one U.S. military attaché was sounding off loudly that Venezuela would be better off under a dictatorship. Some guests were shocked to find this sort of "military mind" assigned to any diplomatic post, much less in a country where military officers have often needed little encouragement to grab the reins of power.

As long as the State Department doesn't implement Milton Eisenhower's policy proposals more vividly, Congressman Porter will undoubtedly continue to be regarded as a big man and much-needed friend in this part of the hemisphere where

Latin Americans are sensitive to the impression that most North Americans haven't much cared whether their struggle for liberty succeeded or not.

There are several skilled diplomats on the U.S. embassy staff here who are well received by Venezuelans and display their preference for democratic processes. But one stumbles easily across an example of harmfully, bumbling staffing, as depicted in the best-seller, "The Ugly American." At a reception at Ambassador Edward Sparks' home on inauguration night, one U.S. military attaché was sounding off loudly that Venezuela would be better off under a dictatorship. Some guests were shocked to find this sort of "military mind" assigned to any diplomatic post, much less in a country where military officers have often needed little encouragement to grab the reins of power.

As long as the State Department doesn't implement Milton Eisenhower's policy proposals more vividly, Congressman Porter will undoubtedly continue to be regarded as a big man and much-needed friend in this part of the hemisphere where

Latin Americans are sensitive to the impression that most North Americans haven't much cared whether their struggle for liberty succeeded or not.

There are several skilled diplomats on the U.S. embassy staff here who are well received by Venezuelans and display their preference for democratic processes. But one stumbles easily across an example of harmfully, bumbling staffing, as depicted in the best-seller, "The Ugly American." At a reception at Ambassador Edward Sparks' home on inauguration night, one U.S. military attaché was sounding off loudly that Venezuela would be better off under a dictatorship. Some guests were shocked to find this sort of "military mind" assigned to any diplomatic post, much less in a country where military officers have often needed little encouragement to grab the reins of power.

As long as the State Department doesn't implement Milton Eisenhower's policy proposals more vividly, Congressman Porter will undoubtedly continue to be regarded as a big man and much-needed friend in this part of the hemisphere where

Latin Americans are sensitive to the impression that most North Americans haven't much cared whether their struggle for liberty succeeded or not.

There are several skilled diplomats on the U.S. embassy staff here who are well received by Venezuelans and display their preference for democratic processes. But one stumbles easily across an example of harmfully, bumbling staffing, as depicted in the best-seller, "The Ugly American." At a reception at Ambassador Edward Sparks' home on inauguration night, one U.S. military attaché was sounding off loudly that Venezuela would be better off under a dictatorship. Some guests were shocked to find this sort of "military mind" assigned to any diplomatic post, much less in a country where military officers have often needed little encouragement to grab the reins of power.

As long as the State Department doesn't implement Milton Eisenhower's policy proposals more vividly, Congressman Porter will undoubtedly continue to be regarded as a big man and much-needed friend in this part of the hemisphere where

Latin Americans are sensitive to the impression that most North Americans haven't much cared whether their struggle for liberty succeeded or not.

There are several skilled diplomats on the U.S. embassy staff here who are well received by Venezuelans and display their preference for democratic processes. But one stumbles easily across an example of harmfully, bumbling staffing, as depicted in the best-seller, "The Ugly American." At a reception at Ambassador Edward Sparks' home on inauguration night, one U.S. military attaché was sounding off loudly that Venezuela would be better off under a dictatorship. Some guests were shocked to find this sort of "military mind" assigned to any diplomatic post, much less in a country where military officers have often needed little encouragement to grab the reins of power.

Duncan Favors Bill on Lobbyists

Salem—(UPI)—House Speaker Robert Duncan (D-Medford) Wednesday came out in favor of a bill introduced in the Senate to prevent state chairmen and national committee members of political parties from lobbying.

The bill was introduced on the information of some senators that Republican Chairman Peter Gunnar was a lobbyist for insurance interests.

Whether or not Gov. Mark Hatfield should demand the resignation of Gunnar is a matter for them to decide, Duncan said.

"I have known Peter Gunnar for some time as an honorable member of the Oregon State Bar, and I know that the sponsors of the bill intended no personal reflection on his character," the speaker added.

"It has been no secret that he is a lobbyist and there is nothing dishonorable in being either a lobbyist or a Republican state chairman," Duncan said. "The sole question is whether or not the public interest will be served by combining the jobs."

OAK GROVE FURNITURE

2784 West Main • Phone SP 3-1564
1 Mile Out West Main

Bill Rombach Says:

Our lease is up. We must vacate immediately! We must sell everything down to the bare walls—nothing will be held back. Our loss is your gain! So come out and get the furniture, new or used, you need—at prices that are fantastically low!

PRICES SLASHED!

On All Furniture—NEW or USED!

NEW DINING ROOM SETS . . . 39⁰⁰

Many beautiful designs to choose from. Modernistic formica tops with wrought iron legs . . . to solid maple. As low as . . .

NEW BEDROOM SETS • NEW LIVING ROOM SETS • NEW LAMPS • CARPETS • LINOLEUM • BEDS

MATTRESS and BOX SPRINGS $19⁰⁰

All New—Twin and Full Size—Priced as Low as . . .

Many Other New Items

Plenty of Used Merchandise—Priced to Sell!

BARGAIN PRICED ANTIQUES!

Everything MUST GO! No Reasonable Offer Refused!

CASH PREFERRED—Terms available. Bring your trailers and pickups.

Open Every Night Until 9:00 P.M.

OPEN ALL DAY SUNDAY! DRIVE OUT!

QUITTING BUSINESS

SALE

CLIMAXING years of bickering, Mrs. Lydia Tarasidis, 54, admits strangling her mother, Mrs. Marie Sarr, 85, with scarf in Milwaukee, Wis., home during row.

Symptoms of Distress Arising from STOMACH ULCERS DUE TO EXCESS ACID QUICK RELIEF OR NO COST

Ask About 15-Day Trial Offer!

Over five million packages of the WILLARD TREATMENT have been sold for relief of symptoms of distress arising from Stomach and Duodenal Ulcers due to Excess Acid—Poor Digestion, Sour or Upset Stomach, Gasiness, Heartburn, Sleeplessness, etc., due to Excess Acid. Ask for "Willard's Message" which fully explains this home treatment—free-at

CENTRAL DRUG WAINSCOTT'S PHARMACY WESTERN THRIFT STORE MCCLAIN'S DRUG CENTRE

Phone: GIER'S DRUG STORE

It's our turn to buy the Friskies!

This unusual offer saves you 60¢ on the premium grade dog foods from Carnation!

Sound too good to be true? Maybe, but the simple fact is we appreciate your buying Friskies in the past, and now we'd like to return the favor. In case you haven't tried Friskies—we'd still like to treat. It's time you introduced your dog to nutritious Friskies.

Friskies Meal is loaded with rich meat meal. All dogs love the meaty taste, meaty aroma of Friskies Meal. And it's so good for them. It's a complete dog food, with every vitamin and mineral and energy food dogs need for perfect health, fine looks. So easy to serve, too. Just add water, milk or gravy. Friskies Meal mixes instantly.

HOW YOU SAVE 60¢. Buy any size of Friskies Meal—or these other fine Friskies! Friskies Cubes, Friskies Kibbled, Friskies Biscuits or Little Friskies. Send in the pup-head from front of package, with the coupon below. By return mail, you will start receiving certificates worth a total of 60¢ towards future purchases.

Keep your dog frisky with FRISKIES!

Send to: Friskies, Box 102, Los Angeles 51, California

Be sure to enclose pup-head from Friskies Meal or Friskies Cubes, Friskies Kibbled, Friskies Biscuits or Little Friskies. Each month for 4 months, we will send you a certificate worth 15¢ on your next purchase. Your total savings—60¢!

Name _____

Address _____

City _____ Zone _____ State _____

This offer void where taxed, prohibited or restricted by law.

Limit one coupon to a family. Offer expires March 31, 1959