Psychiatrists Grow Concerned Over Amateurs in Field

By DELOS SMITH
UPI Science Editor

NEW YORK—Amateur "psychiatrists" have a warning from a professional, qualified man that the business of digging deep into people's minds can be dangerous—for the digger.

Dr. Phillip F. D. Seitz was advising general medical practitioners on whether they could properly engage in psychotherapy despite their lack of specific psychiatric training, but his remarks applied as well to the amateurs who, martini in hand, try to find out what makes another party guest tick.

Amateur Ranks Growing
Professional psychiatrists are remarking, with amusement but also worry as to the consequences, on the growing number of amateurs who have read a book or have had personal experience with psychoglossy and try to work out on anyone who'll stand still. "It's a psychiatric age," they say sarcastically.

But "psychotherapy has become a science with an established body of knowledge sufficiently comprehensive that it now requires years of study to master its principles and techniques," said Dr. Seitz to the doctors who have mastered only medicine in general.

At an example, Seitz told of a young non-psychiatric doctor who had heard of an experimental psychiatric technique for getting deep into the mind of a person suffering from skin disorders of emotional origins. The young man got in deep all right, and put in a hurry-up call for Seitz.

Should Have Training
"He sounded upset and frightened," Seitz said. "I went to the doctor's office, where the patient was found in a violent abreaction of rage, with the very frightened doctor trying to calm him. I had to take over the case because the doctor was clearly too terrified."

The general physician can safely deal with an emotional disturbance which is causing a physical ailment in his patient, if the disturbance is mainly because of something going on in his life at the moment, he said. This kind of person has adjusted well to his emotional problems in the past.

But persons "with long-standing illnesses and past histories of relatively poor adjustment throughout their lives are usually not good candidates for psychotherapy" from anyone but psychiatrists.

General physicians should have some special training even to undertake psychotherapy for the people whose emotional problems are largely on the surface, he said.

Douglas also called for an end to cut-rate rentals ($500 annually) on limousines and big cars on grounds they might cause federal leaders to feel indebted to automakers. The rentals include four Cadillacs, three Chryslers and one Lincoln for the White House.

Some All Right
The lawmaker said he thought it proper for the President to have six government-owned limousines and each cabinet member to have one. He said one each would be all right for the secretaries and chiefs of staff of the Army, Navy and Air Force, the commanders of the Marine Corps and Coast Guard, and perhaps the chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission and the director of the Central Intelligence Agency.

But he said he saw no need to assign limousines or heavy sedans to each member of the AEC, directors of agencies below cabinet level, the director of the National Gallery of Art, the governor of the U.S. Soldiers Home and the director of the Budget.

Senator Would Curb Limousine Use in Capital

Washington—UPI—A senator who rides to work in a taxi complains that taxpayers are paying up to $500,000 a year so military and civilian VIP's can be chauffeured around Washington in fancy limousines.

Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D-Ill.) demanded that the government get rid of 64 of the 99 limousines and heavy sedans it has assigned top officials.

Douglas also called for an end to cut-rate rentals ($500 annually) on limousines and big cars on grounds they might cause federal leaders to feel indebted to automakers. The rentals include four Cadillacs, three Chryslers and one Lincoln for the White House.
