APARTMENT HOUSE DISASTER—A heavy water tank plunged through the roof of this New York apartment house and fell three stories, seriously injuring several persons living in the building. The water tank, weighing several tons, was being repaired on the roof when its supports gave way and it crashd through the roof. One of the victims was an expectant mother.

Small Worlds Around Us

By Lynn M. Watkins

With the End in Sight, Mouse Was Saved in Strange Way

The beach was very wide. Several hundred feet of white sand separated the line of vegetation from the edge of the sea. A gentle breeze pushed tiny, ripple-waves shoreward. The wide expanse of sand was empty except for a tiny, black, moving object that moved along just at the water's edge –a tiny field mouse running as fast as his short legs could carry him. He followed the changing water line as the waves coursed up on the sand. It was hard going. He slipped many times, the sand shifting under his hurrying feet. The little rodent seemed to know enough to stay close to the wave-line where the going was easier. A wave, a little bigger than its fellows, almost caught him, sending him scampering up the beach a short distance and away from the hungry sea. But soon he would forget and again run close by the water's edge.

On His Own

Regardless of "what his mama done told him" he was on his own now. Neither she, nor any inherent mouse-instinct, could have foreseen such a contingency or explain how he got into such a predicament.

All he knew was to run and keep running, not knowing that the beach stretched on and on for many miles in the direction he was headed. He didn't feel that he could go back, so he ran blindly on.

With his weak and short-sighted eyes and low position on the earth, he could not see the beach line where the bushes and grass afforded protection. To him the entire world consisted of vast, endless reaches of white, shifting sand, with water even more hostile than the sand on the other side.

He had come a long way; his strength was nearly spent, but he continued to follow, as close as he dared, the narrow, shifting line that separated the open beach from the sea. He was moving much slower. He fell frequently. The sand under his sore little feet slipped and shifted.

One End

Without help there could be one end: Either a wave would unexpectedly engulf him and carry him out to sea, or he would collapse from sheer exhaustion. The beach was endless, but his endurance was limited. The end could not be long delayed. But help came in an unexpected manner.

A sea gull swooped down and grabbed the tiny mouse, soared up and landward. The mouse, suddenly airborne, began to squirm violently. The surprised gull opened its mouth to squawk and dropped the mouse, who tumbled earthward and landed in the low bushes of the upper beach. With his last strength he scurried into the safety of the grass clump. The little waves down on the beach giggled at the irony of it all.

Group Approves Use of Litterbags

The Rogue Wonderland association met recently at the Rogue River lodge, Trail.

The association is cooperating with the state and national campaign "don't be a litterbug" and are distributing specially designed bags imprinted with tourist information. The bags will be mailed to out-of-state sports shows, the Southern California auto club and various other organizations.

It was announced that the bags would be available at the Stockade on Siskiyou summit this summer and at the Portland Centennial activities.

The association also distributes a brochure containing literature about the Rogue river valley.

Attending the meeting were a large group of new members. They included representatives from 12 Prospect businesses; 7, Trail; 7 Shady Cove; 5, Eagle Point; 4, White City; and 2 from Medford on Highway 62.

The association for business people on Crater Lake highway from Medford to Diamond Lake are interested in promoting ideas for the betterment of the area.

Summer Bomb Tests in Pacific Dwarfed High-Altitude Shots

Washington–(Science Service)–The effects of the three atomic bombs (fission type) exploded 300 miles above the South Atlantic six months ago were dwarfed by the hydrogen bombs exploded some 100 miles above the Pacific last July and August.

Only by direct blast action does it seem possible that such bomb explosions could stop an incoming missile. The idea that radiation set up atomically could do this is discounted.

Although scientists are learning much about the earth's magnetic and electric fields by studying information from the Atlantic tests, they could have learned much more from the Pacific ones if there had been rockets and a satellite equipped to take the same kinds of measurements there.

Many Effects Spotted

As it is, using only the routine recordings made as part of the International Geophysical Year, scientists have spotted many effects caused by the charged particles released in the Pacific blasts.

A hydrogen bomb exploded high in the atmosphere has been described as affecting the earth's very high atmosphere and magnetic and electric fields as the sun would if it suddenly shone in the middle of the night. These effects included a blackout of radio communications, a visual aurora and pronounced changes in the earth's magnetic field.

The radio blackout was due to the sudden increase in the density of electrons in the upper atmosphere due to gamma radiation produced by the explosion. The magnetic changes resulted from charged particles propagated along the invisible lines of force of the earth's magnetic field.

Weaker Degree

These same effects were also found from the atomic blasts in the South Atlantic, but to a very much weaker degree. The atomic bursts were reported "low yield" ones by Deputy Defense Secretary Donald A. Quarles at a news conference here. This would be equivalent to about one to five kilotons (thousands of tons) of TNT. The hydrogen bomb blasts are rated in megatons, or millions of tons, and are therefore some 1,000 times stronger.

The records on which U.S. scientists base their studies are being forwarded to Russia under the International Geophysical Year program agreements.

The Atlantic shots, it is suggested here, may have been carried out in a hurried and ill-planned manner, in order to make the tests before the U.S. suspended nuclear explosions last fall prior to the start of the Geneva talks with Russia and Great Britain on an agreement to ban future bomb tests.

Project Sherwood

The idea for the Atlantic shots resulted from research by Nicolas C. Christofilos, physicist at the University of California's Radiation Laboratory, Livermore, Calif., while working on methods to tame the fusion reaction of hydrogen bombs for peaceful purposes, a program known as Project Sherwood. Last August, Christofilos reported to an American Physical society meeting details of a proposed device to do this called "Astron."

Key to the Astron approach is a cylindrical sheet of high-energy electrons. This electron sheet, called the E-layer, would be responsible both for providing the magnetic confinement of the plasma and for heating it to thermonuclear temperatures.

The Atlantic tests showed that the same kind of mirror effect predicted for the Astron model also works to trap electrons in the earth's magnetic field.

Sleepless Man Claimed Hungry And Affectionate

Chicago–(UPI)–The man who loses a lot of sleep may slough off books and barbells, but he'll stay hungry and affectionate, according to three Utah physicians.

The doctors, in findings released today in the journal of the American Medical Association, said medical students kept awake in a 72 hour "drive test" showed a "most prominent" desire for sleep.

Less expected, however, was their "persistent and sustained interest in food and sex" among choices also including exercise, intellectual activity and hostile behavior.

Opening Wedge

Doctors Eugene L. Bliss, Lincoln D. Clark and Charles D. West, of the medical college of the University of Utah, also warned that the gnawing worry that prevents sleep can drive an opening wedge into a split personality.

Many persons about to suffer a psychotic breakdown experience "severe insomnia and a few pass through a prolonged period of wakefulness as the schizophrenic process unfolds," their findings stated.

The physicians, who practice at the Salt Lake City Veterans Administration hospital, traced cases of two patients whose "seemingly insoluble problems" included intense psychological pain and led to emotional isolation and sleeplessness.

AUDITED PAID CIRCULATION
ABC

The Hallmark of Circulation Value

In the same way that STERLING on silver signifies a standard of known value, so is the A.B.C. emblem a symbol of integrity for the circulation of newspapers and periodicals. It means that circulation so identified is measured according to the rules and standards of the AUDIT BUREAU OF CIRCULATIONS

The A.B.C. is a cooperative and non-profit association of 3,450 publishers, advertisers and advertising agencies. Organized in 1914, these buyers and sellers of advertising brought order out of advertising chaos by setting up standards for paid circulation and establishing rules and methods for measuring, auditing and reporting circulations.

Therefore, the work of the A.B.C., of which this newspaper is proud to be a member, provides you with a direct and valuable service. You can buy advertising as you would make any other sound business investment —on the basis of well known standards, known values.

At regular intervals one of the Bureau's large staff of experienced circulation auditors makes a thorough audit of our circulation records. The results of this exacting audit show: How much circulation we have; where our circulation goes; how it was obtained; and many other FACTS that you need in order to know just what you get for your advertising dollars. This audited information is published by the Bureau in easy-to-read A.B.C. reports which are available to our advertisers on request. Ask for a copy of our latest A.B.C. report.
