The Medical Roundup

by Walter Tilgner

Emeritus Consultant in Medicine,

Housing Projects
For the Retired

The Journal of the Iowa Medical Society tells of a new town being built on the outskirts of Hastings, Neb., and called,
"The Good Samaritan Village."

Already there are 450 apartments available in one-story concrete structures, which were originally occupied by Federal Government workers, during World War II. In these apartments, elderly people will be given opportunities to live either independently, or with supervision and help, or with nursing and medical care. The cost per month will range from $85 to $150 per person.

There is an infirmary supervised by local physicians, and plans are under way for building a much larger infirmary with diagnostic and therapeutic help. Later, a dentist will have an office in the space.
Still later, it is to be hoped there will be a shopping center, a chapel, a park, and a small lake in the vicinity. It looks now as if more and more such groups of apartment houses for elderly people will be built.

I recently read in the Chicago Medical Society Bulletin, Dr. Mustell's report of the local emergency telephone service. A few years ago medical societies all over the country decided to do something to help those many persons who, perhaps in the middle of the night, are faced with a medical emergency, and then haven't the remotest idea where to find a doctor who will get out of his bed and make a call. Perhaps the person calls a half dozen physicians at random only to find that they are all specialists who never see patients outside their office or one particular hospital.

To help people, some medical societies run a special doctors' switchboard with women operators who are so well-acquainted with the doctors and their comings and goings that at noon they may call a physician at his favorite lunch counter, or in the evening may call him out of a meeting of the medical society.

In Chicago, last year, 9,842 patients were helped. On 15, 877 occasions the board searched for one of the 275 physicians who have agreed to act on the panel. Some 1,051 persons cancelled their request for a physician, and 517 did not or would not pay the doctor when he came. This switchboard emergency service cost the medical society some $11,000.
