Ozone Cause of Tobacco Lesions

Washington—(Science Service)—Ozone gas in slow-moving, polluted air may be the cause of "weather fleck" lesions on growing tobacco leaves, the U.S. Department of Agriculture reports. This is the first time injury traceable to ozone has been determined in the eastern part of the country, where concentrations of the gas have been believed to be low.

Telephone Stock Feels Selling Blow

New York—(UPI)—Chemicals, drugs and selected electronics issues featured a mixed stock market today.

Hardest hit by the selling were the American Telephone issues. The old stock lost around 6 at its low and new split shares more than a point. The motors moved narrowly and were a shade easier on balance.

The chemicals got a whirl and gains in this group helped to brighten the list. Thiokol ran up around 8 points at its high and its new split shares added more than 2 points. Allied DuPont and Eastman Kodak all met support and scored gains running past 2 points at the highs.
