

Pearson Denies Bill Irregularity; Reporter Barred

Salem—(UP)—Senate President Walter Pearson (D-Portland) today denied he held a secret meeting in his office and that he had done something unusual in referring a higher education bill to the Senate State and Federal Affairs Committee.

"There have been accusations made in the press that I held a secret meeting in my office. The Senate provides the president with a private office to which he can invite any one he chooses or bar any one that he does not wish to see," Pearson said.

Reporter Barges In

"It so happened that on the day referred to I had a few members of the Senate in my office and one representative of the press. During the discussion an Oregonian reporter barged into the office without knocking on the door and I told him it was a private gathering," he said.

"I learned afterwards that my secretary had requested him not to go into my office and he ignored her. So far as that reporter is concerned, he is barred from my office for the remainder of the session," Pearson declared.

Bills Often Referred

Answering the charge that his handling of the higher education budget containing an 11 per cent salary increase was irregular, Pearson said that many times bills had been referred to committees which had not considered them previously.

The Senate State and Federal Affairs Committee Monday reported out favorably the bill calling for a $55 million higher education budget, including about $40 million from the general fund.

The classroom described would help significantly to create a desirable environment for learning in the social studies and implement the concept of a laboratory for citizenship training activities, Dr. Graham said.

Field Trip by SOC Uncovers Bones

Ashland—Results of an anthropological field trip by Southern Oregon college personnel to a Grants Pass site where human bones were recently discovered have been announced by Dr. W. M. McKinney, social science instructor.

Unearthed by a bulldozer during excavation for a new addition on the Donald R. Johnson residence at 493 Coutant rd., the bones consisted of a part of a jawbone, half a skull, and a number of lesser fragments.

Using a quarter-inch screen loaned by Robert Wright, 1541 Leonard rd., Grants Pass, who also assisted in further excavation at the site, Dr. McKinney and his companions, Eugene B. Antley, social science instructor, and Andy Ortis, SOC student, succeeded in unearthing more than 30 more bone fragments, none of any large size.

Though nothing found at the site pointed conclusively to the origin and history of the discovery, Dr. McKinney pointed out that the way the teeth in the jaw fragment were worn down, exposing the pulp inside, indicated considerable age.

Trapped Dog Fed Pill To Keep Him Quiet During Operations by Rescuers

Owasso, Okla.—(UP)—Rescue workers fed Little Richard a tranquilizer pill in a pound of hamburger to keep him quiet and alive while they chip through solid rock deep in a small cave that has held the coon hunting hound prisoner for six days.

A three-foot, 63-pound midget tried and failed to rescue the dog Tuesday. Six dynamite blasts also did no good.

Soup Fed Through Tube
A cafe owner brought some soup that was fed to the dog through tubes. Little Richard let it trickle down his throat. He gulped the hamburger in nothing flat.

It was the first food Little Richard had since his entrapment last Thursday. Rescuers thought that letting him lose weight might help free him. But the white spotted hound dog has lost an estimated 10 pounds and workers feared he might die from hunger. He was a chubby 60 pounds when he got stuck. He laps water from the sides of the crack damped by a fire hose snaked into the cave.

Dog Recalls
Tuesday night, Don Dillara, a slender 16-year-old who weighs 87 pounds slithered into the cave and tried to grab the dog. But nervous Little Richard recoiled, adding another six inches between him and freedom.

Rescuers said they might get to him today if they can chip through another 24 inches or so of rock.

Albert Leeds, Tulsa, a midget, tried to squeeze into the crack but couldn't make it.

British Airplane Wreck Said Spotted

Nicosia, Cyprus—(UP)—An RAF plane today spotted what was believed to be the wreckage of a British plane missing on a flight to Iran with secret rocket equipment.

It said the wreckage was on a 14,000-foot mountain north of Lake Van in eastern Turkey.

The course of the missing plane had taken it close to the Soviet-Turkish border and it had been feared it had been downed by Soviet jet fighters inside Russia.

The plane, with 12 persons aboard, disappeared Thursday while en route to the Woomeera rocket range in Australia. RAF officials said the wreckage was about 100 miles southeast of the Russian frontier.

The plane, carrying 63 passengers, left here at 11:40 p.m. Monday. Shortly after midnight, the plane was ordered to return. A search of the aircraft revealed no explosives and the passengers took off shortly thereafter on another plane.

A few hours later, White was arrested and charged with violating sections of the U. S. code for conveying false information concerning placing a destructive substance on a commercial aircraft. The FBI office here declined to give details concerning the arrest.

Any 3 Year Old Could Make Cherry-Fudge Ice Cream

(If he had thirty years of of experience.)

$\frac{376}{2} \times \frac{R51}{66} \times \frac{63B}{9} = \text{Cherry-Fudge}$

This might sound simple and it really is. This old family recipe for our super gooey Cherry-Fudge has been handed down from generation to generation since the early 1950's.

Our real secret is how we get a whole gallon of goodness in a half-gallon carton. If your supply of Cherry Fudge Ice Cream is reaching a dangerously low point (five gallons or less), write us collect!
