SHRINKAGE is one of the most frequent problems that occur in cleaning clothes, regardless of the cleaning method.

Although dry cleaning results in the least degree of shrinkage of any method, there are still cases when shrinkage will occur.

Sometimes such shrinkage is a little thing, occurring a little bit at a time with each cleaning—and without your noticing it. All of a sudden the garment is too tight, and it's only natural to blame the latest cleaning. But in some fabrics even the most careful treatment can't completely avoid shrinkage.

There are various reasons for this. One is the practice of stretching fabrics by either the fabric or the clothing manufacturer. Bleaching, mercerizing and dyeing can add to this stretching. When such a stretched fabric is cleaned, by whatever method, it will relax to its normal state. This is called relaxation shrinkage.

The best way to avoid shrinkage is to check labels carefully before you buy to make sure the garment is pre-shrunk. We make every effort to minimize any possible shrinkage in dry cleaning. You can bring us your fine clothes with the confidence that if it can be cleaned safely we can clean it! Call for prompt pick and delivery.
