Royal Jelly Found To Protect Mice From Cancer Types

By DELOS SMITH
UPI Science Editor

New York — (UPI) — A new and intriguing scientific discovery is that royal jelly, which works in their stomachs, will protect mice from four kinds of cancer. It protects them absolutely and without exception.

Three Canadian scientists demonstrated this repeatedly in more than 1,000 mice over a two-year period. Their means were simple and direct. They injected into healthy mice millions of the cells of four experimental cancers of mice. One cancer was leukemia.

When the cells were mixed with royal jelly before injection, all mice survived. When royal jelly was left out of the cell suspensions, all of the mice died of cancer. These uniform results were dependent on two things: The proportion of royal jelly to cancer cells had to be correct, and the acid-alkaline balance of the suspensions had to be adjusted.

Food for Larvae

Whether this discovery will lead to something useful in the prevention and treatment of human cancers, no one can say.

To honey bees, royal jelly is a vital chemical compound. Worker bees make the thick white liquid by somehow arresting the digestion of honey and pollen at a particular point. This liquid they feed to bee larvae for three days.

After that, almost all of the bee-babes go on a diet of honey. The few who continue on royal jelly, and only these, develop into "queens" with the capacity of laying eggs and thus perpetuating the race of bees. It's no wonder that royal jelly has fascinated chemists.

But despite the fascination, there still are many chemical mysteries in the compound. The last notable development was the isolation of a fatty acid-10-hydroxydecanoic acid — from jelly in 1940. The Canadian scientists showed that this fraction contained the anti-cancer activity.

Same Effect

This they showed by separating it from whole royal jelly and mixing it in pure form with cancer cells before injecting them into mice. It had the same effect as whole royal jelly — the mice who got it along with the cancer cells, never got cancer.

Woonsocket, R.I. — (UPI) — Two airmen, who parachuted from a jet fighter before it crashed and exploded Tuesday, were reported in critical condition here today.

The F-89 Scorpion slammed to earth on a farm, narrowly missing a group of homes.

The pilot, Capt. Arthur Cannella, 29, of Chappaqua, N.Y., parachuted into 12 feet of water in a pond and was pulled from the water by Roland Ruge, 17. Cannella suffered multiple fractures.

Lt. Robert J. Scarse Jr., 26, of Portland, Ore., landed on the roof of the U.S. Rubber Co. plant here and also suffered fractures.

Belgian King Eyes Debbie Reynolds

Hollywood — (UPI) — Bachelor King Baudouin of Belgium met an array of glamorous movie stars Tuesday but he seemed to have eyes only for Hollywood's newest bachelorette, Debbie Reynolds.

The 28-year-old ruler twice had the petite film beauty as his table partner, and both times he had little conversation with anyone else.

He and Miss Reynolds danced into the early morning hours at a dinner party Tuesday night held in his honor.

Earlier, at a luncheon in the MGM commissary, the King also met such beauties as Mamie Van Doren, but his attention was fully taken up with 27-year-old Miss Reynolds.

Only last week she was divorced by Eddie Fisher in Nevada so he could marry Elizabeth Taylor.

Miss Reynolds was one of the few unescorted women to attend the private dinner party for the King at producer Mervyn Leroy's secluded home in nearby Bel Air.
