Group Seeking To Boost Interest in Science Education

Oklahoma City—(UPI)—An Oklahoma organization is seeking to stimulate interest in science education by fostering the same restless spirit that drove the pioneers who first settled the United States.

The Frontiers of Science Foundation of Oklahoma, Inc., founded four years ago by a group of businessmen and educators, is a guiding force in Oklahoma's creation of a climate favorable for the development of science and scientists.

The group recently received the praise of President Eisenhower's Committee on Scientists and Engineers for "the most effective state-wide program" in the nation for stimulating interest in science.

Must Keep Spirit
"We must keep the restless spirit that led to the settling of this nation if we are to keep our place in the world," explained Dean A. McGee, Oklahoma City oilman and foundation president.

"Science is the new frontier, and we must push back that frontier if we are to remain strong."

"To do this, however, we must stimulate the public to demand a better educational system, particularly in the fields of science and mathematics."

The foundation is providing this stimulation by inviting scientists to speak to students at all schools levels, providing grants for individual and cooperative research, working with educators to improve school curricula, providing scholarships for scientific studies in colleges and universities and sponsoring a series of science lectures for school and civic groups throughout the state.

"Before we established the foundation," McGee said, "we talked with scientists throughout the nation. They all were concerned about the quality of education in science and mathematics being offered in the schools."

"They were especially interested in the education of able and gifted persons who will be needed for continued scientific progress."

McGee said the gifted student must be given every opportunity for development, then have a place in which to put his knowledge to full use.

"For this reason, we also are striving for the creation of a climate for the successful operation of research laboratories and science-based industry in Oklahoma," he said.

Work Just Beginning
Stanley Draper, foundation vice president, said the foundation's work is just beginning because the future of science is unlimited.

"The pioneer instinct in science has no boundaries such as oceans or other countries, which our pioneer forefathers found when they opened the land frontier," he said.

"We're just beginning to find out things in science, so we can't be satisfied with what we have now. Only God knows how far we can go."
